DISCUSSION: The nonimmigrant visa petition was denied by the director and is now before the Associate Commissioner for Examinations on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The petitioner is an automobile dealership group with 98 employees and an approximate gross annual income of 37 million. It seeks to employ the beneficiary as its international trade director for a period of three years. The director determined that the petitioner had not established that the offered position is a specialty occupation.

On appeal, counsel submits a brief. Counsel now argues that the proffered position is a market research analyst position and, as such, a specialty occupation.

8 C.F.R. 214.2(h)(4)(ii) defines the term "specialty occupation" as:

an occupation which requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge in fields of human endeavor including, but not limited to, architecture, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine and health, education, business specialties, accounting, law, theology, and the arts, and which requires the attainment of a bachelor's degree or higher in a specific specialty, or its equivalent, as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

The director denied the petition because the duties of the offered position as described by the petitioner appeared to be the duties of a marketing manager. On appeal, counsel states that the director erred in not classifying the position as a market research analyst. Counsel maintains that the level of the beneficiary's duties are sufficiently sophisticated and indicative of a market research analyst position.

Counsel's argument on appeal is not persuasive. The Service does not rely solely on the title of a position in determining whether that position qualifies as a specialty occupation. The specific duties of the offered position combined with the nature of the petitioning entity's business operations are factors that the Service considers. In the initial I-129 petition, the petitioner described the duties of the offered position as follows:

[The beneficiary] will ... develop, coordinate and manage international wholesale activity of our company. He will conduct economic and commercial surveys of foreign countries to determine market feasibility. He will be responsible for initiating contacts with potential dealerships in foreign countries of possible joint venture. He will train and supervise employees in the foreign trade department on export documentation procedures. Finally, he will provide detailed reports to the chairman of the company on the progress of foreign trade.

The duties described, while quite detailed, are not the responsibilities of a market research analyst as set forth in the Department of Labor's (DOL) Occupational Outlook Handbook (Handbook), 2000-2001 edition. Therefore, the Service is not persuaded to classify the position as the specialty occupation of a market research analyst.

The first reason why the Service is not persuaded to classify the offered position as a market research analyst position concerns the particular duties of the offered position compared with the duties of a typical market research analyst position. At page 148 of the Handbook, the DOL states that "[m]arket research analysts are concerned with the potential sales of a product or service. They analyze statistical data on past sales to predict future sales." The duties described by the petitioner are not related to the analysis of any type of sales.

The second reason why the Service is not persuaded to classify the offered position as a market research analyst position relates to the type of industry in which the beneficiary would be employed. Information in the Handbook, at page 149, provides insight into the types of industries in which market research analysts are normally found. According to the DOL:

Private industry provided about 4 out of 5 jobs for salaried workers, particularly economic and marketing research firms, managements consulting firms, banks, securities and commodities brokers, and computer and data processing companies.

Although the list of private industry employers is not all inclusive, the DOL's description of a market research analyst's job implies that these types of positions are found within large firms or corporations, such as banks or worldwide pharmaceutical companies.

The business of automobile dealerships in which the petitioner is engaged, is not within the DOL's list of industries that typically require the services of a full-time individual who performs only market research analyst duties. For these reasons, the Service is not persuaded to label the offered position as a market research analyst position.

Although the Service does not agree with the petitioner that the position it is offering is a market research analyst position, the petitioner could, nevertheless, qualify the offered position as a specialty occupation if the petitioner could establish that:

1. A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
2. The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
3. The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or
4. The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

See. 8 C.F.R. 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A).

An analysis of the beneficiary's proposed duties reveals that the job being offered is the job of a marketing manager or a market research manager. According to DOL at page 25 of the Handbook:

Marketing managers develop the firm's detailed marketing strategy. With the help of subordinates, including product development managers and market research managers, they determine the demand for products and services offered by the firm and its competitors. In addition, they identify potential markets . . . Marketing managers develop pricing strategy with an eye towards maximizing the firm's share of the market and its profits while ensuring that the firms's customers are satisfied. In collaboration with sales, product development, and other managers, they monitor trends that indicate the need for new products and services and oversee product development.

The beneficiary's proposed job duties parallel the job responsibilities of a marketing manager or market research manager. Information at page 25 of the Handbook does not indicate that either position requires a bachelor's degree in a specialized field of study. Rather, most employers prefer a wide-range of educational backgrounds or promote individuals from within companies. Thus, the petitioner has not shown that a bachelor's degree or its equivalent in a specialized area is required for the position being offered to the beneficiary.

Additionally, the petitioner has not provided any evidence that it has, in the past, required the services of individuals with baccalaureate or higher degrees in a specialized area for the offered position. Furthermore, the petitioner has not presented any documentary evidence that businesses similar to the petitioner in their type of operations, number of employees, and amount of gross annual income, require the services of individuals in parallel positions. Finally, the petitioner did not demonstrate that the nature of the beneficiary's proposed duties is so specialized and complex that the knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has failed to establish that any of the four factors enumerated above are present in this proceeding for the position of a market research manager or marketing manager. Therefore, the director's decision is affirmed.

The burden of proof in these proceedings rests solely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. 1361. The petitioner has not sustained that burden. Accordingly, the decision of the director will not be disturbed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
