FOR THE ASSOCIATE COMMISSIONER,
EXAMINATIONS

Robert P. Wiemann, Director
Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The nonimmigrant visa petition was denied by the director and is now before the Associate Commissioner for Examinations on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The petitioner is a food service equipment manufacturer with 64 employees and a gross annual income of $18,385,595. It seeks to employ the beneficiary as an export and government customer service representative for a period of three years. The director determined the petitioner had not established that the proffered position is a specialty occupation.

On appeal, the petitioner submits a brief.

8 C.F.R. 214.2(h)(4)(ii) defines the term "specialty occupation" as:

an occupation which requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge in fields of human endeavor including, but not limited to, architecture, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine and health, education, business specialties, accounting, law, theology, and the arts, and which requires the attainment of a bachelor's degree or higher in a specific specialty, or its equivalent, as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

The director denied the petition because the petitioner had not demonstrated that the position of customer representative requires a baccalaureate degree. On appeal, the petitioner's human resources manager states, in part, that the person who previously filled the proffered position held a bachelor's degree in business. She further states that although the title of the proffered position has been renamed to "export/government sales assistant," the proposed duties have always demonstrated the requirement for a baccalaureate degree.

The petitioner's statement on appeal is not persuasive. The Service does not use a title, by itself, when determining whether a particular job qualifies as a specialty occupation. The specific duties of the offered position combined with the nature of the petitioning entity's business operations are factors that the Service considers. In the initial I-129 petition, the petitioner described the duties of the offered position, in part, as follows:

* Responds to customer requests and questions regarding products and account information with direction from National Sales Manager.

- * Acts as a liaison between the factory and export/government customers in the absence of the Director of Export/Government Sales.
- * Assists Director of Export/Government Sales in following up on sales leads, including communicating effectively verbally and via the Internet in order to properly channel all sales leads.
- * Analyzes and rectifies customer concerns following established procedures and direction from National Sales Manager.
- * Responsible for providing monthly reports, tracking export sales by country.
- * Responsible for coordinating order entry and follow-up of export/government sales, including providing accurate quotations, preparing documentation and shipping forms and securing freight quotes.
- * Ensures accuracy of export voltage requirements by confirming specifications with customers and consulting with our Service Department.
- * Capable of interpreting government contracts and understanding the requirements for obtaining them.
- * Serves as a back-up for Lead Sales/Service Order Entry Clerk.
- * Assists Director of Export/Government Sales and National Sales Manager as needed on various projects.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, the position must meet one of the following criteria:

1. A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
2. The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
3. The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or

4. The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has not met any of the above requirements to classify the offered position as a specialty occupation.

First, the Service does not agree with the petitioner's argument that the proffered position would normally require a bachelor's degree in business or a related field. The proffered position combines the duties of a customer service representative with the duties of a marketing manager. In its Occupational Outlook Handbook (Handbook), 2002-2003 edition, at page 396, the Department of Labor (DOL) finds that a high school diploma or its equivalent is the most common educational requirement for information and record clerk positions. For customer service representatives, some college education may be preferred.

In its Handbook, the DOL also finds no requirement of a baccalaureate or higher degree in a specialized area for employment as a marketing manager. A wide range of educational backgrounds are considered suitable for entry into marketing managerial positions. Some employers prefer a bachelor's or master's degree in business administration with an emphasis on marketing, but many employers prefer those with experience in related occupations plus a broad liberal arts background. In addition, certain personal qualities and participation in in-house training programs are often considered as significant as the beneficiary's specific educational background.

Furthermore, the petitioner has not established that the beneficiary's foreign language duties are of such complexity that a baccalaureate degree in a specific specialty, as distinguished from familiarity with the specific foreign languages or a less extensive education, is necessary for the successful completion of its duties. Thus, the petitioner has not shown that a bachelor's degree or its equivalent is required for the position being offered to the beneficiary.

Second, although the petitioner's human resources manager states that the previous occupant of the proffered position was also required to hold a bachelor's degree in business, the petitioner's reasoning is problematic when viewed in light of the statutory definition of specialty occupation. The petitioner's creation of a position with a perfunctory bachelor's degree requirement will not mask the fact that the position is not a specialty occupation. As with employment agencies as petitioners, the Service must examine the ultimate employment of the alien, and determine whether the position qualifies as a specialty occupation. Cf. Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384 (5th Cir. 2000). The critical element is not the title of the position or an employer's self-imposed standards, but whether the position actually requires the theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and the attainment of a bachelor's degree in the specific specialty as the minimum for entry into the occupation as required by the Act.¹ To interpret the regulations any other way would lead to absurd results: if the Service was limited to reviewing a petitioner's self-imposed employment requirements, then any alien with a bachelor's degree could be brought into the United States to perform a menial, non-professional, or an otherwise non-specialty occupation, so long as the employer required all such employees to have bachelor's degrees. See id. at 388.

In this case, although the petitioner claimed to have hired only individuals with a bachelor's degree in business for its export and government customer service representative/export and government sales positions, the position, nevertheless, does not meet the statutory definition of specialty occupation. The position, itself, does not require the theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge. Therefore, even though the petitioner has required a bachelor's degree in the past, the position still does not require a bachelor's degree in a specific specialty.

Third, the petitioner did not present any documentary evidence that businesses similar to the petitioner in their type of operations, number of employees, and amount of gross annual income, require the services of individuals in parallel positions. Finally, the petitioner did not demonstrate that the nature of the beneficiary's proposed duties is so specialized and complex that the knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has failed to establish that any of the four factors enumerated above are present in this proceeding. Accordingly, it is concluded that the petitioner has not demonstrated that the offered position is a specialty occupation within the meaning of the regulations.

¹ The court in Defensor v. Meissner observed that the four criteria at 8 C.F.R. 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) present certain ambiguities when compared to the statutory definition, and "might also be read as merely an additional requirement that a position must meet, in addition to the statutory and regulatory definition." Supra at 387.

The burden of proof in these proceedings rests solely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. 1361. The petitioner has not sustained that burden.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
