Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The nonimmigrant visa petition was denied by the director and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The petitioner is an almond huller, sheller, and processor business with five employees and a gross annual income of $1,600,000. It seeks to employ the beneficiary as a computer aid for a period of three years. The director determined the petitioner had not established that the proffered position is a specialty occupation.

On appeal, counsel submits a brief. Counsel states that the petitioner submits an amendment to the petition, which changes the title of the proffered position to "computer programmer." Counsel also submits an amended labor condition application for a computer programmer position.

The petitioner's letter dated November 19, 2001, requesting to amend the title of the proffered position to that of computer programmer is noted. The record, however, contains no evidence that an amended petition with fee was filed along with the new labor condition application. For the purposes of this proceeding, therefore, the proffered position and proposed duties to be considered are those that are reflected in the initial petition.

Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b), provides in part for nonimmigrant classification to qualified aliens who are coming temporarily to the United States to perform services in a specialty occupation. Section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), defines a "specialty occupation" as an occupation that requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and attainment of a bachelor's or higher degree in the specific specialty (or its equivalent) as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to section 214(i)(2) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(2), to qualify as an alien coming to perform services in a specialty occupation the beneficiary must hold full state licensure to practice in the occupation, if such licensure is required to practice in the occupation. In addition, the beneficiary must have completed the degree required for the occupation, or have experience in the specialty equivalent to the completion of such degree and recognition of expertise in the specialty through progressively responsible positions relating to the specialty.

The director denied the petition because the petitioner had not demonstrated that a baccalaureate degree is required for the proffered position. On appeal, counsel states, in part, the proffered position is that of a computer programmer rather than a computer aid. Counsel further states that the proposed duties, which include developing customized computer programs to be used for marketing, operations management, and financial planning, are so specialized and complex that a bachelor's degree is required.

Counsel's statement on appeal is not persuasive. The Bureau does not use a title, by itself, when determining whether a particular job qualifies as a specialty occupation. The specific duties of the offered position combined with the nature of the petitioning entity's business operations are factors that the Bureau considers. In the initial I-129 petition, the petitioner described the duties of the offered position as follows:

Creating/maintaining all computer databases e.g. marketing, hull & shell contracts, Growers [sic], plant operation software. Creating/distributing reports to stakeholders, Invoicing, Budgeting, track operation w. acc. Software [sic], all other computer & general office duties.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, the position must meet one of the following criteria:

1. A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
2. The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
3. The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or
4. The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has not met any of the above requirements to classify the offered position as a specialty occupation.

First, the Bureau does not agree with counsel's assertion that the proffered position would normally require a bachelor's degree in business administration or a related field. The proffered position contains some of the duties of a computer programmer. In its Occupational Outlook Handbook, 2002-2003 edition, at page 168, the Department of Labor (DOL) states, in part, as follows:

Employers using computers for scientific or engineering applications usually prefer college graduates [computer programmers] who have degrees in computer or information science, mathematics, engineering, or the physical sciences. . . . Employers who use computers for business applications prefer to hire people who have had college courses in management information systems (MIS) and business and who possess strong programming skills.

The record reflects that the petitioner, which is engaged in the hulling, shelling, and processing of almonds, employs five persons. The petitioner has not demonstrated that it requires the services of a computer programmer for scientific or engineering applications or that the position requires an individual with knowledge of sophisticated programming techniques normally associated with the duties of a programmer/analyst.

The duties that the petitioner endeavors to have the beneficiary perform relate to business applications. Thus, the petitioner has not shown that a bachelor's degree or its equivalent is required for the position being offered to the beneficiary.

Second, the petitioner has not demonstrated that it has, in the past, required the services of individuals with baccalaureate or higher degrees in a specific specialty for the offered position. Third, the petitioner did not present any documentary evidence that a baccalaureate degree in a specific specialty or its equivalent is common to the industry in parallel positions among organizations similar to the petitioner. Finally, the petitioner did not demonstrate that the nature of the beneficiary's proposed duties is so specialized and complex that the knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has failed to establish that any of the four factors enumerated above are present in this proceeding. Accordingly, it is concluded that the petitioner has not demonstrated that the offered position is a specialty occupation within the meaning of the regulations.

The burden of proof in these proceedings rests solely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. The petitioner has not sustained that burden.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
