Robert P. Wiemann, Director
Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The nonimmigrant visa petition was denied by the director and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The petitioner is a real estate investment business with two employees and an undisclosed gross annual income. It seeks to employ the beneficiary as a business management analyst for a period of three years. The director determined the petitioner had not established that the proffered position is a specialty occupation.

On appeal, counsel submits a brief.

Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b), provides in part for nonimmigrant classification to qualified aliens who are coming temporarily to the United States to perform services in a specialty occupation. Section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), defines a "specialty occupation" as an occupation that requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and attainment of a bachelor's or higher degree in the specific specialty (or its equivalent) as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to section 214(i)(2) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(2), to qualify as an alien coming to perform services in a specialty occupation the beneficiary must hold full state licensure to practice in the occupation, if such licensure is required to practice in the occupation. In addition, the beneficiary must have completed the degree required for the occupation, or have experience in the specialty equivalent to the completion of such degree and recognition of expertise in the specialty through progressively responsible positions relating to the specialty.

The director denied the petition because the petitioner had not demonstrated that a baccalaureate degree is required for the proffered position. On appeal, counsel states, in part, that the proposed duties, which include studying work problems with regard to particular projects such as organizational change, communications, information flow, and cost analysis, are the duties of a business management analyst, a position that requires a baccalaureate degree in business administration or an equivalent thereof.

Counsel's statement on appeal is not persuasive. The Bureau does not use a title, by itself, when determining whether a particular job qualifies as a specialty occupation. The specific duties of the offered position combined with the nature of the petitioning entity's business operations are factors that the Bureau considers. In the initial I-129 petition, the petitioner described the duties of the offered position as follows:

[The beneficiary] will be responsible for analyzing business procedures with regard to Real Estate investment projects in order to devise [the] most efficient methods of accomplishing goals. He will plan study of work problems with regard to particular projects, such as organizational change, communications, information flow, and cost analysis. He will gather and organize information on problems or procedures including present operating procedures. [The beneficiary] will analyze data gathered, develop information and consider available solutions or alternate methods of proceeding. He will organize and document findings of studies and prepare recommendations for implementation of news systems, procedures or organizational changes in order to meet projected completion dates. [The beneficiary] will assure smooth functioning of newly implemented systems and procedures.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, the position must meet one of the following criteria:

1. A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
2. The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
3. The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or
4. The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has not met any of the above requirements to classify the offered position as a specialty occupation.

First, the Bureau does not agree with counsel's assertion that the beneficiary is a management analyst, an occupation that would normally require a master's degree in business administration or a related field and at least five years of related experience. In its Occupational Outlook Handbook (Handbook), 2002-2003 edition, at page 73, the Department of Labor (DOL) describes the job of a management analyst, in part, as follows:

After obtaining an assignment or contract, management analysts first define the nature and extent of the problem. During this phase, they analyze relevant data, which may include annual revenues, employment, or expenditures, and interview managers and employees while observing their operations. The analyst or consultant then develops solutions to the problem. In the course of preparing their recommendations, they take into account the nature of the organization, the relationship it has with others in that industry, and its internal organization and culture. Insight into the problem is often gained by building and solving mathematical models.

The record reflects that the petitioner, which is in the real estate investment business, employs two persons and has an undisclosed gross annual income. The business in which the beneficiary is to be employed does not require the services of a management analyst who analyzes data such as annual reports, employment, and expenditures, and interviews managers and employees while observing their operations. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the position offered includes complex or advanced duties such as building and solving mathematical models, or that the position requires an individual with a knowledge of sophisticated analysis techniques normally associated with the duties of a management analyst.

The duties that the petitioner endeavors to have the beneficiary perform are similar to the duties that a general manager or operations manager would execute in a small business establishment. In contrast to the description of a management analyst, at page 87 of the Handbook, the DOL describes the positions of a general manager and operations manager, in part, as follows:

General and operations managers plan, direct, or coordinate the operations of companies or public and private sector organizations. The duties include formulating policies, managing daily operations, and planning the use of materials and human resources, but are too diverse and general in nature to be classified in any one area of management or administration, such as personnel, purchasing or administrative services.

The types of duties the petitioner ascribes to the beneficiary fall within the scope of a general manager or an operations manager position rather than a management analyst position. A review of the DOL's Handbook at pages 87-88 finds no requirement of a baccalaureate or higher degree in a specific specialty for employment as general and operations managers (top executives). Many general and operations managers have a bachelor's or higher degree in business administration or liberal arts. In addition, many are promoted from within the organization. Thus, the petitioner has not shown that a bachelor's degree or its equivalent is required for the position being offered to the beneficiary.

Second, the petitioner has not shown that it has, in the past, required the services of individuals with baccalaureate or higher degrees in a specific specialty such as business administration, for the offered position. Third, the petitioner did not present any documentary evidence that a baccalaureate degree in a specific specialty or its equivalent is common to the industry in parallel positions among organizations similar to the petitioner. Finally, the petitioner did not demonstrate that the nature of the beneficiary's proposed duties is so specialized and complex that the knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

The petitioner has failed to establish that any of the four factors enumerated above are present in this proceeding. Accordingly, it is concluded that the petitioner has not demonstrated that the offered position is a specialty occupation within the meaning of the regulations.

The burden of proof in these proceedings rests solely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. The petitioner has not sustained that burden.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
