IN RE:

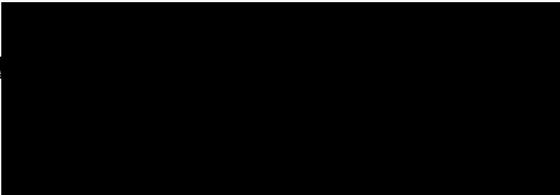

Applicant:

APPLICATION:

Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v).

ON BEHALF OF APPLICANT:

INSTRUCTIONS:

This is the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office in your case. All documents have been returned to the office that originally decided your case. Any further inquiry must be made to that office.

Robert P. Wiemann, Director
Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Officer in Charge, Manila, Philippines, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of the Philippines who was found by the Officer in Charge to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for a period of one year or more. The applicant is the beneficiary of an approved Petition for Alien Relative filed by her U.S. citizen spouse. She seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v) in order to travel to the United States and reside with her U.S. citizen spouse and child.

The Officer in Charge concluded that the applicant had failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on a qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly. See Officer in Charge's Decision dated July 7, 2003.

The record reflects that on December 27, 1997, the applicant was admitted to the United States with a K-1 nonimmigrant visa, as a fiancé of a U.S. citizen for a period of three months, expiring on March 24, 1998. The applicant failed to marry the U.S. citizen who had petitioned for her fiancé visa and remained in the United States beyond her authorized stay. She married a U.S. citizen on February 27, 1999, and departed the United States on January 19, 2003. She thus accrued unlawful presence in excess of one year making her inadmissible under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

(i) In general. - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who -

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year of more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver. - The Attorney General has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act was amended by the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA). After reviewing the IIRIRA amendments to the Act regarding fraud, misrepresentation and unlawful presence in the United States and after noting the increased impediments Congress has placed on such activities, including the narrowing of the parameters for eligibility, the re-inclusion of the perpetual bar, in some instances, eliminating children as a consideration in determining the presence of extreme hardship, and providing a ground of inadmissibility for unlawful presence after April 1, 1997, it is concluded that Congress has placed a high priority on reducing and/or stopping fraud, misrepresentation and unlawful presence of aliens in the United States.

As stated above, section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act provides that a waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship on a qualifying family member. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

In the present case, the applicant must demonstrate extreme hardship to her U.S. citizen spouse.

Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560 (BIA 1999) provides a list of factors the Bureau of Immigration Appeals (BIA) deems relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. These factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate.

On appeal counsel asserts that the Officer in Charge failed to correctly assess extreme hardship to the applicant's spouse [REDACTED] and failed to adequately consider and weigh the favorable factors against adverse factors required to decide whether a waiver is merited in the Secretary's discretion.

Before the AAO can weigh the favorable and unfavorable factors in this case it must first determine if the qualifying family member would suffer extreme hardship if the applicant's waiver application were not approved.

In support of the assertion, counsel submits a brief and letters of recommendation from family and friends regarding the hardship [REDACTED] would suffer if the applicant were not permitted to enter the United States. In the brief counsel states that [REDACTED] would suffer emotionally and financially if his spouse's waiver application were not approved. Furthermore, in the brief counsel states that it would be impossible for [REDACTED] to relocate to the Philippines in order to join his wife because he would not be able pursue employment opportunities and he would lose his retirement benefits, family health insurance and other benefits if he were to residing from his job.

If [REDACTED] were to relocate with the applicant to the Philippines, it would be expected that some economic, linguistic and cultural difficulties would arise. Aside from generalized country conditions and statements, no evidence was presented that this would impact him at a level commensurate with extreme hardship.

There are no laws that require Mr. Prudent to leave the United States and live abroad. In Silverman v. Rogers, 437 F. 2d 102 (1st Cir. 1970), the court stated that, "even assuming that the Federal Government had no right either to prevent a marriage or destroy it, we believe that here it has done nothing more than to say that the residence of one of the marriage partners may not be in the United States." The uprooting of family and separation from friends does not necessarily amount to extreme hardship but rather represent the type of inconvenience and hardship experienced by the families of most aliens being deported. See Shoostary v. INS, 39 F. 3d 1049 (9th Cir. 1994).

The court held in Garcia-Lopes v. INS, 923 F.2d 72 (7th Cir. 1991), that less weight is given to equities acquired after a deportation order has been entered. Further, the equity of a marriage and the weight given to any hardship to the spouse is diminished if the parties married after the commencement of deportation proceedings, with knowledge that the alien might be deported. The BIA noted in Cervantes-Gonzalez, that the alien's wife knew that he was in deportation proceedings at the time they were married. The BIA stated that this factor went to the wife's expectations at the time they wed because she was aware she might have to face the decision of parting from the husband or follow him to Mexico in the event he was ordered deported. The BIA found this to undermine the alien's argument that his wife would suffer extreme hardship if he were deported. Id.

In the present case [REDACTED] was aware of the applicant's immigration violation and the possibility of not being able to remain in the United States or to obtain an immigrant visa in order to reside in the United States at the time of their marriage on February 27, 1999.

Counsel further states if the applicant is not permitted to enter the United States [REDACTED] would become a single parent, required to care for and support his child. According to counsel [REDACTED] would be unable to do so due to his employment obligations. In the alternative, counsel states that if his child relocates to the Philippines [REDACTED] would suffer hardship from the separation from his child. Counsel states that [REDACTED] Prudent is experiencing depression to the point where he cannot even tend to the yard or do simple household chores and is having problems concentrating at work [REDACTED] has not submitted documentary evidence or a professional evaluation regarding his mental or emotional condition.

[REDACTED] states that if he relocates to the Philippines with the applicant he would be separated from his elderly parents who reside in the United States and are unable to travel long distances due to their age and medical problems. Additionally he would not be able to enjoy his hobbies such as visiting museums, traveling in the country and boating with family and friends.

While the AAO understands that familial separation is difficult, the emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship.

U.S. court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of deportation or exclusion are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996). U.S. court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of deportation or exclusion are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991). Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996), held that the common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship and defined "extreme hardship" as hardship that was unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected upon deportation. Hassan v. INS, supra, held further that the uprooting of family and separation from friends does not necessarily amount to extreme hardship but rather represents the type of inconvenience and hardship experienced by the families of most aliens being deported. Moreover, the U.S. Supreme Court held in INS v. Jong Ha Wang, 450 U.S. 139 (1981), that the mere showing of economic detriment to qualifying family members is insufficient to warrant a finding of extreme hardship.

A review of the documentation in the record, when considered in its totality reflects that the applicant has failed to show that her U.S. citizen spouse would suffer extreme hardship if she were not permitted to travel to the United States at this time. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether the applicant merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
