Perry Rhew

Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the District Director, Mexico City, Mexico, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record reflects that the applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of his last departure from the United States. The record indicates that the applicant is married to a United States citizen and he is the beneficiary of an approved Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v), in order to reside in the United States with his United States citizen wife and daughter.

The District Director found that the applicant failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on the applicant's spouse and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Excludability (Form I-601) accordingly. Decision of the District Director, dated September 22, 2006.

On appeal, the applicant, through counsel, asserts that the District Director "erred in denying the applicant/appellant's application for waiver." Form I-290B, filed October 17, 2006.

The record includes, but is not limited to, counsel's letter, an affidavit and letter from the applicant's wife, a letter from the applicant's father-in-law, copies of household bills, and a letter in Spanish from [REDACTED] regarding the applicant's health condition. The entire record was reviewed and considered in arriving at a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) Aliens Unlawfully Present.-

- (i) In general.-Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-
 - (II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.
- (v) Waiver.-The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security, "Secretary"] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

The AAO notes that the record contains several references to the hardship that the applicant's daughter would suffer if the applicant were denied admission into the United States. Section 212(a)(9)(B)(i) of the Act provides that a waiver, under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, is applicable solely where the applicant establishes extreme hardship to his citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent. Unlike a waiver under section 212(h) of the Act, Congress does not mention extreme hardship to United States citizen or lawful permanent resident children. In the present case, the applicant's wife is the only qualifying relative, and hardship to the applicant's daughter will not be considered, except as it may cause hardship to the applicant's wife.

In the present application, the record indicates that the applicant initially entered the United States on October 4, 1995 without inspection. On February 8, 2002, the applicant's United States citizen wife filed a Form I-130 on behalf of the applicant. On February 20, 2004, the applicant's Form I-130 was approved. In November 2005, the applicant departed the United States. On November 16, 2005, the applicant filed a Form I-601. On September 22, 2006, the District Director denied the Form I-601, finding that the applicant accrued more than a year of unlawful presence and failed to demonstrate extreme hardship to his United States citizen spouse.

The applicant accrued unlawful presence from April 1, 1997, the date of enactment of unlawful presence provisions under IIRIRA, until November 2005, the date the applicant departed the United States. The applicant is attempting to seek admission into the United States within 10 years of his November 2005 departure from the United States. The applicant is, therefore, inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(II) of the Act for being unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than one year.

A section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship the applicant himself experiences upon removal is irrelevant to a section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceeding. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565-66 (BIA 1999), the Board of Immigration Appeals (Board) provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate.

In a letter dated October 1, 2006, counsel claims the applicant's "wife and young daughter, both citizens of the United States, would suffer extreme hardship if [the applicant] is deported." In an undated affidavit, the applicant's wife states "[t]he time [they have] spent apart has caused [her] to suffer from extreme hardship. It has been very depressing, because [she] depend[s] on [the applicant] for so many things." The applicant's wife further states she "[has] had to deal with anxiety and depression." The AAO notes that the applicant's wife may be suffering some emotional and psychological hardship through her separation from the applicant; however, there are no professional psychological evaluations for the AAO to review to determine if the applicant's wife is suffering from any depression and/or anxiety or whether any depression and/or anxiety is beyond that experienced by others as a result of the removal or inadmissibility of a spouse.

Counsel states the applicant's wife and daughter "rely immensely on [the applicant] for emotional and financial support." In a letter dated September 25, 2006, the applicant's father-in-law states the applicant "is a hard worker who has always helped to support his family." The AAO notes that the applicant's wife is a native and citizen of the United States and she may experience some hardship in relocating to Mexico; however, it has not been established that she has no transferable skills that would aid her in obtaining a job in Mexico. Additionally, the AAO notes that it has not been established that the applicant's wife does not speak Spanish or that she has no family ties in Mexico. In fact, the AAO notes that the applicant's parents are natives of Mexico. The applicant's wife states "[her] daughter needs to have [the applicant] here to care for her and nurture her." The AAO notes that the applicant's daughter may experience some hardship in relocating to Mexico; however, the applicant's daughter is not a qualifying relative for a waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. The applicant's wife states the applicant "has been suffering from stress-related problems such [as] high blood pressure. He is also wracked with anxiety and depression." The AAO notes that the applicant is receiving treatment for his medical and psychological conditions in Mexico. Additionally, as noted above, hardship the applicant himself experiences upon removal is irrelevant to a section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceeding. The AAO finds that the applicant failed to establish that his wife would suffer extreme hardship if she joined him in Mexico.

In addition, counsel does not establish extreme hardship to the applicant's wife if she remains in the United States, with access to educational opportunities and in close proximity to her family. Counsel states the applicant's wife and daughter would stay in the United States if the applicant "is forced to stay in Mexico." As a United States citizen, the applicant's wife is not required to reside outside of the United States as a result of denial of the applicant's waiver request. In an undated letter, the applicant's wife states the applicant is her "daughter's caretaker. He watches her while I work." The AAO notes that it has not been established that the applicant's wife is unable to provide or obtain adequate care for her daughter in the applicant's absence or that this particular hardship is atypical of individuals separated as a consequence of removal or inadmissibility. Counsel states that if the applicant stays in Mexico, the applicant's wife "would be unable to earn enough money to sustain herself and her child." The applicant's wife states since the applicant has been in Mexico, she has "spent all of [their] savings.... The situation is already becoming desperate, [she] cannot see how [they] are going to stay afloat much longer." The AAO notes that it has not been established that the applicant is unable to obtain employment in order to help support his family, or that he is unable to contribute to his family's financial wellbeing from a location outside of the United States. Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has held that the mere showing of economic detriment to qualifying family members is insufficient to warrant a finding of extreme hardship. INS v. Jong Ha Wang, 450 U.S. 139 (1981).

United States court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of deportation or exclusion are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991). For example, in Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996), the Board held that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship. In addition, Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996), held that the common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship and defined extreme hardship as hardship that was unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected upon deportation. In Hassan, supra, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held further that the uprooting of family and separation from friends does not necessarily amount to extreme hardship but rather represents the type of inconvenience and hardship experienced by the families of most aliens being deported.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant's spouse caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether he merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
