DISCUSSION: The International Adjudications Support Branch, on behalf of the District Director, Mexico City, Mexico denied the waiver application and the matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of his last departure from the United States. The applicant was also found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I), for having committed a crime involving moral turpitude. The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse and children.

The District Director concluded that the record failed to establish the existence of extreme hardship for a qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly. See Decision of the District Director, dated January 14, 2010.

On appeal, counsel for the applicant asserts that the applicant's spouse is suffering mental and emotional deterioration and experiencing financial problems in the absence of the applicant.

In support of the waiver application and appeal, the applicant submitted letters from the applicant's spouse, identity documents, letters of support, psychological and medical documentation concerning the applicant's spouse, and financial documentation. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(2)(A) of the Act states, in pertinent parts:

- (i) [A]ny alien convicted of, or who admits having committed, or who admits committing acts which constitute the essential elements of –
 - (I) a crime involving moral turpitude (other than a purely political offense) or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such a crime . . . is inadmissible.

Section 212(h) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

- (h) The Attorney General [Secretary of Homeland Security] may, in his discretion, waive the application of subparagraph (A)(i)(I), (B), . . . of subsection (a)(2) . . . if –
 - (1) (A) in the case of any immigrant it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that–
 - (i) the alien is inadmissible only under subparagraph (D)(i) or (D)(ii) of such subsection or the activities for which the alien is inadmissible occurred more than 15 years before the date of the alien's application for a visa, admission, or adjustment of status.

(ii) the admission to the United States of such alien would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security of the United States, and

(iii) the alien has been rehabilitated; or

(B) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, parent, son, or daughter of a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the alien's denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to the United States citizen or lawfully resident spouse, parent, son, or daughter of such alien

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) held in Matter of Perez-Contreras, 20 I&N Dec. 615, 617-18 (BIA 1992), that:

[M]oral turpitude is a nebulous concept, which refers generally to conduct that shocks the public conscience as being inherently base, vile, or depraved, contrary to the rules of morality and the duties owed between man and man, either one's fellow man or society in general....

In determining whether a crime involves moral turpitude, we consider whether the act is accompanied by a vicious motive or corrupt mind. Where knowing or intentional conduct is an element of an offense, we have found moral turpitude to be present. However, where the required mens rea may not be determined from the statute, moral turpitude does not inhere.

(Citations omitted.)

In Matter of Silva-Trevino, 24 I&N Dec. 687 (A.G. 2008), the Attorney General articulated a new methodology for determining whether a conviction is a crime involving moral turpitude where the language of the criminal statute in question encompasses conduct involving moral turpitude and conduct that does not. First, in evaluating whether an offense is one that categorically involves moral turpitude, an adjudicator reviews the criminal statute at issue to determine if there is a "realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility," that the statute would be applied to reach conduct that does not involve moral turpitude. Id. at 698 (citing Gonzalez v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183, 193 (2007)). A realistic probability exists where, at the time of the proceeding, an "actual (as opposed to hypothetical) case exists in which the relevant criminal statute was applied to conduct that did not involve moral turpitude. If the statute has not been so applied in any case (including the alien's own case), the adjudicator can reasonably conclude that all convictions under the statute may categorically be treated as ones involving moral turpitude.” Id. at 697, 708 (citing Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 193).

However, if a case exists in which the criminal statute in question was applied to conduct that does not involve moral turpitude, “the adjudicator cannot categorically treat all convictions under that statute as convictions for crimes that involve moral turpitude.” 24 I&N Dec. at 697 (citing Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 185-88, 193). An adjudicator then engages in a second-stage inquiry in which the adjudicator reviews the “record of conviction” to determine if the conviction was based on conduct involving moral turpitude. Id. at 698-699, 703-704, 708. The record of conviction consists of documents such as the indictment, the judgment of conviction, jury instructions, a signed guilty plea, and the plea transcript. Id. at 698, 704, 708.

If review of the record of conviction is inconclusive, an adjudicator then considers any additional evidence deemed necessary or appropriate to resolve accurately the moral turpitude question. 24 I&N Dec. at 699-704, 708-709. However, this “does not mean that the parties would be free to present any and all evidence bearing on an alien’s conduct leading to the conviction. (citation omitted). The sole purpose of the inquiry is to ascertain the nature of the prior conviction; it is not an invitation to relitigate the conviction itself.” Id. at 703.

The applicant was convicted of evading arrest or detention with a vehicle pursuant to section 38.04 of the Texas Penal Code, a felony, on January 6, 2006. The district director found the applicant to be inadmissible for having been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude. The applicant has not disputed this determination on appeal. As the applicant has not disputed inadmissibility on appeal and the record does not show the district director’s finding of inadmissibility to be erroneous, the AAO will not disturb the district director’s inadmissibility finding.

It is noted that, in an unpublished decision, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, in Pulido-Alatorre v. Holder, 381 Fed. Appx. 355 (5th Cir. 2010), upheld the Board of Immigration Appeal’s finding that intentional flight with a vehicle is a crime involving moral turpitude, as such conduct reflects an awareness and conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustifiable risk.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act, in pertinent part, provides:

(B) ALIENS UNLAWFULLY PRESENT.-

(i) In general.- Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver.-The Attorney General has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien. No court shall have jurisdiction to review a decision or action by the Attorney General regarding a waiver under this clause.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who entered the United States without admission or parole in March 2004. The applicant remained in the United States until his departure in February 2006. The applicant accrued unlawful presence in the United States from his initial entry into the United States until his departure. Accordingly, the applicant accrued over one year of unlawful presence in the United States, and is inadmissible under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act.

As the applicant's waiver application under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act is the more restrictive of the waivers for which he is applying, his appeal will be adjudicated in accordance with this section. A section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship to the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent. Hardship to the applicant or his children is not considered in section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceedings unless it causes hardship to a qualifying relative, in this case the applicant's spouse. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

In the present case, the record reflects that the applicant is a 33 year-old native and citizen of Mexico. The applicant’s spouse is a 34 year-old native and citizen of the United States. The applicant is currently residing in Mexico and the applicant’s spouse is residing in Denver City, Texas.

Counsel for the applicant asserts that the applicant’s spouse is suffering financial hardship because she cannot work, as she is caring for a newborn child. Counsel contends that she had to move in with her parents because she could not pay her bills. The applicant’s spouse asserts that she had to request government assistance for medical coverage for her children and that it is hard on her parents to provide her family with financial support. In a letter dated January 9, 2009, the applicant's spouse further asserts that she received a notice of cancellation for her car insurance because she was unable to make payment the previous month. A psychotherapy evaluation for the applicant's spouse states that her mother is employed as a certified nurse's assistant and her father is a successful pumper in the petroleum industry. The record contains car loan documentation for the applicant's spouse, dated January 8, 2009. The record does not contain any updated financial documentation; there is no indication that the applicant's spouse, with the financial assistance of her parents, has been unable to meet her financial obligations since 2009. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence generally is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

Counsel for the applicant asserts that the applicant's spouse has been suffering mental and emotional hardship since the departure of the applicant. The applicant asserts that she misses the applicant very much and worries about his safety in Mexico. The record contains a psychotherapy evaluation of the applicant's spouse diagnosing the applicant's spouse with adjustment disorder, major depression, and anxiety disorder. The evaluation states that a further separation from the applicant could worsen the applicant's spouse's diagnosis. The record reflects that the applicant's spouse was prescribed medication by a physician for her insomnia and depression. It is noted that the applicant's psychological documentation, including the evaluation and prescription, are dated January and February 2009. The record does not contain any updated supporting documentation concerning the applicant's spouse's medical or psychological condition.

It is acknowledged that separation from a spouse often creates hardship for both parties, and the evidence indicates that the applicant's spouse would suffer emotional hardship due to separation from the applicant. However, there is insufficient evidence in the record, in the aggregate, to find that the applicant's spouse would suffer extreme hardship upon separation from the applicant. While the prospect of separation or involuntary relocation nearly always results in considerable hardship to individuals and families, a waiver of inadmissibility is only available in cases of extreme hardship, and not in every case where a qualifying relationship exists.

The applicant's spouse asserts that she cannot relocate to Mexico to reside with the applicant because the applicant is not able to earn enough to support herself and their children. The psychotherapy evaluation of the applicant's spouse states that the applicant's spouse is sending money to the applicant in Mexico, as he is only able to obtain odd jobs to support himself. The record does not contain supporting documentation concerning money transfers from the applicant's spouse to the applicant in Mexico.

The applicant spouse's Form I-130 reflects that she is a native of the United States. The applicant's spouse asserts that she is currently residing with her four children and parents. It is noted that the record contains letters of support from the applicant's spouse's family and friends in the United States.

The psychotherapy evaluation of the applicant's spouse states that the applicant is currently residing in Ojinaga, Mexico. The record reflects that the applicant was born in Ojinaga, Chihuahua, Mexico and that his mother currently resides in this city and state. The applicant's spouse asserts that she is concerned about the violence in Mexico. The U.S. Department of State issued a travel warning concerning Mexico on July 12, 2013. The travel warning states that non-essential travel to the state of Chihuahua should be deferred and crime and violence remain serious problems throughout the state.

In this case, the record contains sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, in the aggregate, would rise to the level of extreme hardship if she relocated to Mexico. The record, however, does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative upon separation, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. U.S. court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of removal are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991), Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996); Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996) (holding that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810 (BIA 1968) (holding that separation of family members and financial difficulties alone do not establish extreme hardship). “[O]nly in cases of great actual or prospective injury . . . will the bar be removed.” Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246 (BIA 1984).

We can find extreme hardship warranting a waiver of inadmissibility only where an applicant has demonstrated extreme hardship to a qualifying relative in the scenario of separation and the scenario of relocation. A claim that a qualifying relative will relocate and thereby suffer extreme hardship can easily be made for purposes of the waiver even where there is no actual intention to relocate. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 886 (BIA 1994). Furthermore, to relocate and suffer extreme hardship, where remaining the United States and being separated from the applicant would not result in extreme hardship, is a matter of choice and not the result of inadmissibility. Id., also cf. Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996). As the applicant has not demonstrated extreme hardship from separation, we cannot find that refusal of admission would result in extreme hardship to the qualifying relative in this case.

The AAO therefore finds that the applicant has failed to establish extreme hardship to his U.S. citizen spouse as required under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. As the applicant has not established extreme hardship to a qualifying family member, no purpose would be served in balancing positive and negative factors to determine whether the applicant merits this waiver as a matter of discretion.

In application proceedings, it is the applicant's burden to establish eligibility for the immigration benefit sought. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
