Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Accra, Ghana. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Ghana who was found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i), for attempting to enter the United States on August 12, 2000 by using a visa in a name other than her own. The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i), in order to live in the United States with her husband.

The Field Office Director concluded that the applicant failed to establish that a bar to her admission to the United States would result in extreme hardship to the qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly. See Decision of the Field Office Director dated October 7, 2008.

On appeal, the qualifying spouse provided an affidavit detailing the hardships that he would encounter as a result of his separation from the applicant. In his affidavit, the applicant's spouse contends that it would be "very difficult for [him] to raise [his son] as a single father without the help of his mother" and that none of his family members in the United States that can help him. The qualifying spouse further asserts that he has no other relative in Ghana and that he has close ties to the United States including his parents and siblings. Moreover, he indicates that he is currently caring for a disabled aunt, that she is his dependent and that if the applicant were in the United States, she could assist him with his aunt. Moreover, the applicant's spouse indicated in his first affidavit that he would be unable to support his family if he moved back to Ghana and that his son would not be able to get an education in the United States.

The record contains the following documentation: the original Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601), the Notice of Appeal (Form I-290B), two affidavits from the qualifying relative, two documents regarding [REDACTED] and a "Rehab Clinic" for podiatry, a certificate indicating the applicant has no criminal history in Ghana, a marriage certificate, the applicant's birth certificate, a wage and tax statement for the qualifying spouse, some tax documents, an approved Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130), the qualifying spouse's naturalization certificate, photographs of the applicant and the qualifying spouse, a handwritten letter from the qualifying spouse and documentation regarding the qualifying spouse's trips to Ghana. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

- (i) Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.

Section 212(i) of the Act provides that:

The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] may, in the discretion of the Attorney General [Secretary], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an alien who is the spouse, son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien or, in the case of an alien granted classification under clause (iii) or (iv) of section 204 (a)(1)(A) or clause (ii) or (iii) of section 204(a)(1)(B), the alien demonstrates extreme hardship to the alien or the alien's United States citizen, lawful permanent resident, or qualified alien parent or child.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. The applicant's husband is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

As a qualifying relative is not required to depart the United States as a consequence of an applicant's inadmissibility, two distinct factual scenarios exist should a waiver application be denied: either the qualifying relative will join the applicant to reside abroad or the qualifying relative will remain in the United States. Ascertaining the actual course of action that will be taken is complicated by the fact that an applicant may easily assert a plan for the qualifying relative to relocate abroad or to remain in the United States depending on which scenario presents the greatest prospective hardship, even though no intention exists to carry out the alleged plan in reality. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 885 (BIA 1994) (addressing separation of minor child from both parents applying for suspension of deportation). Thus, we interpret the statutory language of the various waiver provisions in section 212 of the Act to require an applicant to establish extreme hardship to his or her qualifying relative(s) under both possible scenarios. To endure the hardship of separation when extreme hardship could be avoided by joining the applicant abroad, or to endure the hardship of relocation when extreme hardship could be avoided by remaining in the United States, is a matter of choice and not the result of removal or inadmissibility. As the Board of Immigration Appeals stated in Matter of Ige:

[W]e consider the critical issue . . . to be whether a child would suffer extreme hardship if he accompanied his parent abroad. If, as in this case, no hardship would ensue, then the fact that the child might face hardship if left in the United States would be the result of parental choice, not the parent's deportation.

Id. See also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of deportation, removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. at 631-32; Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 883; Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

We observe that the actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., In re Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate).

Family separation, for instance, has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal in some cases. See Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. at 813. Nevertheless, family ties are to be considered in analyzing hardship. See Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 565-66. The question of whether family separation is the ordinary result of inadmissibility or removal may depend on the nature of family relationship considered. For example, in Matter of Shaughnessy, the Board considered the scenario of parents being separated from their soon-to-be adult son, finding that this separation would not result in extreme hardship to the parents. Id. at 811-12; see also U.S. v. Arrieta, 224 F.3d 1076, 1082 (9th Cir. 2000) (“Mr. Arrieta was not a spouse, but a son and brother. It was evident from the record that the effect of the deportation order would be separation rather than relocation.”). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board considered the scenario of the respondent’s spouse accompanying him to the Phillipines, finding that she would not experience extreme hardship from losing “physical proximity to her family” in the United States. 22 I&N Dec. at 566-67.

The decision in Cervantes-Gonzalez reflects the norm that spouses reside with one another and establish a life together such that separating from one another is likely to result in substantial hardship. It is common for both spouses to relocate abroad if one of them is not allowed to stay in the United States, which typically results in separation from other family members living in the United States. Other decisions reflect the expectation that minor children will remain with their parents, upon whom they usually depend for financial and emotional support. See, e.g., Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 886 (“[I]t is generally preferable for children to be brought up by their parents.”). Therefore, the most important single hardship factor may be separation, particularly where spouses and minor children are concerned. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); Cerrillo-Perez, 809 F.2d at 1422.

Regardless of the type of family relationship involved, the hardship resulting from family separation is determined based on the actual impact of separation on an applicant, and all hardships must be considered in determining whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond the consequences ordinarily associated with removal or inadmissibility. Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. at 383. Nevertheless, though we require an applicant to show that a qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship both in the event of relocation and in the event of separation, in analyzing the latter scenario, we give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship of separation itself, particularly in cases involving the separation of spouses from one another and/or minor children from a parent. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293.

The applicant’s qualifying relative is her United States citizen husband.

The documentation provided which specifically relates to the qualifying spouse’s hardship includes two affidavits from the qualifying relative, two documents regarding [REDACTED] and a “Rehab Clinic” for podiatry, a wage and tax statement for the qualifying spouse, some tax documents and a handwritten letter from the qualifying spouse. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

As aforementioned, the qualifying spouse provided an affidavit detailing the hardships that he would encounter as a result of his separation from the applicant. In his affidavit, the applicant’s spouse contends that it would be a hardship for him to raise his son as a single father. The qualifying spouse further asserts that he has no family ties to Ghana, and that his entire family lives in the United States including his parents and siblings. Moreover, he explains that he is currently caring for a disabled aunt, that she is his dependent and that if the applicant were in the United States, she could assist him to help his aunt. Moreover, the applicant’s spouse indicated in his first affidavit that he would be unable to support his family if he moved back to Ghana and that his son would suffer from not getting an education in the United States.

The AAO finds that the applicant has failed to establish that her spouse will suffer extreme hardship as a consequence of being separated from the applicant. The applicant's spouse asserts that it would be a hardship for him to be forced to raise his son as a single parent without any assistance. However, the applicant failed to provide any documentation or details explaining the exact difficulties that he would encounter as a single parent and how his issues are outside the ordinary consequences of removal. Moreover, the applicant's spouse contends that the applicant could assist him in caring for his disabled aunt if she was in the United States. However, the record does not provide any details to account for the qualifying spouse's resulting hardship if the applicant were unable to assist him in caring for his aunt. As such, the applicant has not met her burden to demonstrate that her qualifying spouse would face extreme hardship, if he were to remain in the United States without the applicant.

The applicant also failed to demonstrate that her qualifying spouse would suffer extreme hardship in the event that he relocates to Ghana. The record contains no country condition documentation supporting claims that the qualifying relative would be unable to find adequate employment in Ghana. If the applicant's husband relocated to Ghana, he would no longer experience the hardships associated with being a single father. Further, as the qualifying spouse is a native of Ghana, he is less likely to experience the hardships associated with adjusting to a foreign culture. Further, the applicant's spouse asserts that he has no family ties to Ghana and that his entire family lives in the United States, including his parents and siblings. However, no supporting evidence was provided to confirm that his relatives all live in the United States, aside from his own assertions in affidavits. Similarly, other than assertions by the qualifying spouse, no documentation to confirm that his aunt is disabled and that she is dependent upon him was provided. The record contains two documents regarding [REDACTED] (whom the AAO will presume is the qualifying spouse's aunt although no documentation was provided to confirm her identity) and her need to attend a "Rehab Clinic" for podiatry. However, this documentation fails to explain the qualifying spouse's aunt's disability and her need for his assistance or whether other family members could provide assistance. Moreover, it is unclear from this evidence how the qualifying spouse would suffer a hardship without the applicant's assistance in helping him. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence generally is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)). As such, the applicant has not met her burden in demonstrating that her qualifying spouse will suffer an extreme hardship in the event that he relocates to Ghana.

In this case, the record does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. The AAO therefore finds that the applicant has failed to establish extreme hardship to her United States citizen spouse as required under section 212(i) of the Act. As the applicant has not established extreme hardship to a qualifying family member, no purpose would be served in determining whether the applicant merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
