Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the District Director, Mexico City, Mexico, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record reflects that the applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of her last departure from the United States. The record indicates that the applicant is married to a United States citizen and she is the beneficiary of an approved Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v), in order to reside in the United States with her United States citizen husband and children.

The District Director found that the applicant failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on the applicant's spouse and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Excludability (Form I-601) accordingly. Decision of the District Director, dated October 19, 2007.

On appeal, the applicant's husband submits a letter stating the hardship claimed.

The record includes, among other documentation, three letters from the applicant's husband detailing the hardship claim. See letters from [REDACTED] dated May 31, 2006, November 19, 2007, and an undated letter mailed January 16, 2008. The entire record was reviewed and considered in arriving at a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) Aliens Unlawfully Present.-

- (i) In general.-Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-
  - ....
  - (II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.
  - ....
- (v) Waiver.-The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security, "Secretary"] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

In the present application, the record indicates that the applicant entered the United States in February 2001, without inspection. On June 7, 2005, the applicant's husband filed a Form I-130 on behalf of the applicant. On March 2, 2006, the applicant's Form I-130 was approved. On June 2, 2006, the applicant departed the United States for Mexico. On June 15, 2006, the applicant filed a Form I-601. On October 19, 2007, the District Director denied the Form I-601, finding that the applicant accrued more than a year of unlawful presence and failed to demonstrate extreme hardship to her United States citizen spouse.

The applicant accrued unlawful presence from her entry in February 2001, until June 2, 2006, when she departed the United States. The applicant is attempting to seek admission into the United States within 10 years of her February 2006 departure from the United States. The applicant is, therefore, inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(II) of the Act for being unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than one year.

A section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship the applicant herself experiences upon removal is irrelevant to a section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceeding. The AAO also notes that the record contains several references to the hardship that the applicant's children would suffer if the applicant were denied admission into the United States. Section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act provides that a waiver is applicable solely where the applicant establishes extreme hardship to her citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent. Unlike a waiver under section 212(h) of the Act, Congress does not mention extreme hardship to United States citizen or lawful permanent resident children. In the present case, the applicant's husband is the only qualifying relative, and hardship to the applicant's children will not be considered, except as it may cause hardship to the applicant's spouse. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

The concept of extreme hardship to a qualifying relative "is not...fixed and inflexible," and whether extreme hardship has been established is determined based on an examination of the facts of each individual case. Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). In Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) set forth a list of non-exclusive factors relevant to determining whether an applicant has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act. These factors include, with respect to the qualifying relative, the presence of family ties to U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents in the United States, family ties outside the United States, country conditions where the qualifying relative would relocate and family ties in that country, the financial impact of departure, and significant health conditions, particularly where there is diminished availability of medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. at 566. The BIA has also held:

Relevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists. In each case, the trier of fact must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.

Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (citations omitted).

U. S. courts have stated, “the most important single hardship factor may be the separation of the alien from family living in the United States,” and also, “[w]hen the BIA fails to give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship that will result from family separation, it has abused its discretion.” Salcido-Salcido v. INS, 138 F.3d 1292, 1293 (9th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted); Cerrillo-Perez v. INS, 809 F.2d 1419, 1424 (9th Cir. 1987) (remanding to BIA) (“We have stated in a series of cases that the hardship to the alien resulting from his separation from family members may, in itself, constitute extreme hardship.”) (citations omitted). Separation of family will therefore be given appropriate weight in the assessment of hardship factors in the present case.

The AAO notes, however, that the courts have repeatedly held that the common results of removal or inadmissibility are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991). The common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship as extreme hardship has generally been defined as hardship that is unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected upon deportation. See Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996); see also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996) (holding that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810 (BIA 1968) (holding that separation of family members and financial difficulties alone do not establish extreme hardship). Only “in cases of great actual or prospective injury...will the bar be removed.” Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246 (BIA 1984).

The applicant does not establish extreme hardship to her husband if he remains in the United States. The applicant’s husband claims that he is experiencing financial hardship as a result of separation from his family. He states that he is “driving himself crazy” because he does not have a job because of the time he has taken to visit his family in Mexico, and now he also does not have money, his kids, his wife, or a home.

However, the applicant’s husband does not provide evidence of the family’s income and expenses. The applicant’s husband does not indicate whether his wife is employed and state her earnings, nor does he specify the household bills for their home in the United States, and the expenses he will incur to maintain a household in Mexico. Also, although the applicant’s husband states that he lost his job because he takes time off to visit his family in Mexico, he does not indicate whether he is able to obtain alternative employment, such as a job where he will have the flexibility to visit his family in Mexico. Without details of the family’s expenses, the AAO is unable to assess the nature and extent of financial hardship, if any, the family will face. It is noted that the record fails to demonstrate that the applicant will be unable to contribute to her family’s financial wellbeing from a location outside of the United States.

In his letters, the applicant’s husband states that he loves his wife and wants her by his side, and his wife’s absence has been “emotional torture” for him. In his November 7, 2007 letter, the applicant’s husband states that because of the family separation his health is deteriorating and he is “having a nervous breakdown;” that he is diabetic and “need[s] his wife and [his] kids in order to survive and support each other;” That [he] can barely do anything” because his mother died in 2008 and he now cares for his father who has dementia. The applicant’s husband, however, does not provide evidence, such as a medical report of any health issues pertaining to his father’s medical condition. Also, he does not give details of the care his father requires and the nature and extent of the care he is required to provide for his father, and how the applicant would assist him provide such care to his father. Therefore, the AAO cannot make an assessment as to the hardship the applicant’s spouse suffers due to having to care for his father without his wife to assist him.

Although the applicant’s assertions are relevant and have been taken into consideration, little weight can be afforded them in the absence of supporting evidence. See Matter of Kwan, 14 I&N Dec. 175 (BIA 1972) (“Information in an affidavit should not be disregarded simply because it appears to be hearsay; in administrative proceedings, that fact merely affects the weight to be afforded it.”). Going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

The AAO also notes that the applicant’s children may experience some hardship because the applicant is in Mexico; however, the applicant’s children are not qualifying relatives for a waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act and it has not been established that any hardship they may experience will cause hardship to the applicant’s spouse, the only qualifying relative. Furthermore, it has not been established that these particular hardships are atypical of individuals separated as a consequence of removal or inadmissibility.

It is noted that the applicant does not claim hardship to her husband if he joins her in Mexico. The AAO finds, therefore, that the applicant has failed to establish that her husband would suffer extreme hardship if he joined her in Mexico.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant’s spouse caused by the applicant’s inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether he merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
