DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Mexico City, Mexico. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within ten years of his last departure from the United States. The applicant's spouse is a U.S. citizen. He seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States.

The field office director found that the applicant had failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and the application was denied accordingly. Decision of the Field Office Director, dated September 8, 2009.

On appeal, counsel asserts that the applicant's spouse is suffering extreme hardship without the applicant. Brief in Support of Appeal, dated October 5, 2009.

The record includes, but is not limited to, counsel's brief, a psychological evaluation, a statement in Spanish and financial records. The entire record was reviewed and considered, except for the statement in Spanish, in rendering a decision on the appeal.¹

The record reflects that the applicant entered the United States without inspection in May 2000 and departed the United States in July 2008. The applicant accrued unlawful presence from December 17, 2000, the date he turned 18 years old, until July 2008, the date of his departure. The applicant is inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act for being unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than one year and seeking readmission within ten years of his July 2008 departure from the United States.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) Aliens Unlawfully Present.-

(i) In general. - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver. – The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

A section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship to the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant or children is not considered in section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceedings unless it causes hardship to a qualifying relative, in this case the applicant's spouse. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is “not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning,” but “necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case.” Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The psychologist who evaluated the applicant’s spouse states that denial of the waiver would produce severe psychological damage to her and would have a devastating effect on the lives of her children; she suffers from anxiety and is particularly vulnerable to extreme emotional distress; moving out of the United States would result in an exacerbation of her psychopathology; she is fluent in Spanish; she grew up in Mexico and the United States; both of her children are receiving medical treatment for bronchitis; she would be worried about making money in Mexico; her clinical profile depicted having obsessive compulsive personality, depressive features and schizoid traits; the applicant states that his brother has not found a job in six months in Mexico and he is concerned about his children’s health; there are high rates of crime and other dangerous circumstances for the children; the applicant has limited education and marketable skills; it would be hard to afford medical care for their children in Mexico; and their children would lose opportunities. Psychological Evaluation, dated July 7, 2008.

The record does not include supporting documentary evidence that the applicant’s children have bronchitis and are receiving medical treatment. Going on record without supporting documentation will not meet the applicant’s burden of proof in this proceeding. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)). The record is not clear as to which part of Mexico the applicant’s spouse would relocate to and whether there are safety issues in that area. The record does not include supporting documentary evidence of financial hardship should the applicant’s spouse relocate to Mexico.

In addition, the AAO also notes that the applicant's spouse has spent some time in Mexico and speaks Spanish. The record reflects that the applicant's spouse may experience emotional difficulty in Mexico, however, the record lacks sufficient documentary evidence of emotional, financial, medical or other types of hardship that, in their totality, establish that she would suffer extreme hardship upon relocating to Mexico.

The psychologist who evaluated the applicant's spouse states that the applicant's spouse spends most of her time with the applicant and their children; she is likely to mistrust anyone with her children if she works and is planning on having the children go to Mexico with the applicant; she developed greater inner security and emotional stability after meeting and marrying the applicant; her anxiety has become severely exacerbated and could become more severe if he is gone on a long term basis; and their children would be devastated without a parent and would be at risk for many impairments. Psychological Evaluation.

Counsel states that the applicant's spouse's financial statement reflects that she is struggling to provide for her two U.S. citizen children on her own. Brief in Support of Appeal. The financial statement presented reflects monthly expenses of $3,114.52 and the records includes documentary evidence to substantiate many of the expenses. However, the record does not include supporting documentary evidence that the applicant's spouse cannot work and also support her two children.

The record reflects that the applicant's spouse may experience emotional difficulty without the applicant, however, the record lacks sufficient documentary evidence of emotional, financial, medical or other types of hardship that, in their totality, establish that she would suffer extreme hardship upon remaining in the United States.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant's spouse caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether he merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
