DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Mexico City, Mexico, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record establishes that the applicant, a native and citizen of Mexico, entered the United States using a Border Crossing Card on November 25, 2000, was admitted until November 27, 2000, and remained until October 27, 2005, when he voluntarily departed. The applicant accrued unlawful presence from expiration of the temporary admission through the March 2, 2001 filing date of his Application to Register Permanent Resident or to Adjust Status (Form I-485) and, again, from the September 11, 2003 Form I-485 denial[1] until the June 29, 2005 grant of voluntary departure.[2] As a result, he was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present for one year or more. The applicant does not contest this finding of inadmissibility, but rather, is seeking a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse.

The field office director concluded the applicant had failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on a qualifying relative and, accordingly, denied the Application for Waiver of Ground of Inadmissibility (Form I-601). Decision of the Field Office Director, March 10, 2010.

On appeal, the applicant augments the record with new factual evidence. In support of the appeal, the qualifying relative provides new documentation, including, but not limited to: an updated hardship letter; a W-2 statement, a medical record, and prescription receipts. The record also contains a hardship letter submitted with the waiver application. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

> (i) In general. - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-
> > (II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

[1] The I-485 filing tolled the accumulation of unlawful presence during the pendency of the adjustment application. See Adjudicator's Field Manual, 40.9.2(b). Upon denial of the application, accrual of unlawful presence resumed.

[2] Under AFM 40.9.2(b), accrual of unlawful presence stops on the date voluntary departure is granted. The record shows that, by a June 29, 2005 order, an immigration judge granted the applicant voluntary departure through October 27, 2005.

> (v) Waiver. – The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General (Secretary) that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien…

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's U.S. citizen spouse is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Moralez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an applicant has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). Factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate; the Board added that not all of these factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list is not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, while hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, or cultural readjustment differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, although family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); conversely, see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining case-by-case whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The applicant's wife contends she will suffer physical, emotional, and financial hardship if the applicant is unable to reside in the United States. She reports having back and hip pain, as well as diabetes. A medical chart note supports these claims and indicates that she has been prescribed medication for these conditions, while receipts show the prescriptions were filled. She also claims to be fearful of falling and injuring herself or going into a diabetic coma. However, absent an explanation in plain language from the treating physician of the exact nature and severity of any condition and a description of any treatment or family assistance needed, the AAO is not in the position to reach conclusions concerning the severity of a medical condition or the treatment needed. Further, earnings documents and her own statement suggest that her conditions did not prevent the qualifying relative from working. She claims that the applicant is her sole support and confidante, but the record contains no evidence substantiating any psychological issues or showing the type of emotional help he provides. Without evidence explaining in nonmedical terms the seriousness, prognosis, or treatment of her conditions, we are unable to assess these claims. The record does not indicate the qualifying relative is unable to visit her husband in Mexico to ease the pain of separation or, in general, that her situation differs from that of spouses separated from each other.

Regarding financial hardship, the applicant's wife contends that her husband's well-paying former job awaits his return. There is, however, no evidence either showing the applicant's earnings history or confirming that a job opening exists. Nor does the record reflect his contribution to household income before departing, or his wife's claimed loss of her house and job in 2005. We note that the qualifying relative claims to have been employed since February 2008, and provides documentation that she earned over $29,000 in 2009, but the record contains no details of her liabilities and expenses, of the applicant's income or expenses, or any suggestion that he is an economic burden. Therefore, while the AAO recognizes that separation raises financial issues, the evidence falls short of establishing particularly harsh consequences beyond those commonly or typically associated with separation of husband and wife.

For all these reasons, the cumulative effect of the physical, emotional, and financial hardships the applicant's wife is experiencing due to her husband's inadmissibility does not rise to the level of extreme. The AAO concludes based on the evidence provided that, were his wife to remain in the United States without the applicant due to his inadmissibility, she would not suffer extreme hardship beyond those problems normally associated with family separation.

The qualifying relative does not contend she would experience hardship if she relocated abroad to reside with the applicant. Absent any claim of adverse consequences to the applicant's wife of joining her husband abroad, and based on a totality of the circumstances, the AAO concludes the applicant has not established that his wife would suffer extreme hardship were she to relocate to reside with the applicant.

The record, reviewed in its entirety and in light of the Cervantes-Gonzalez factors, cited above, does not support a finding that the applicant's qualifying relative will face extreme hardship if the applicant is unable to reside in the United States. Rather, the record demonstrates that she will face no greater hardship than the unfortunate, but expected, disruptions, inconveniences, and difficulties arising whenever a spouse is removed from the United States and/or refused admission. The AAO therefore finds that the applicant has failed to establish extreme hardship to her husband as required under the Act.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility, the burden of establishing that the application merits approval remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. The applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, this appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed. The waiver application is denied.
