DATE: JAN. 17, 2018

APPEAL OF IMMIGRANT INVESTOR PROGRAM OFFICE DECISION

PETITION: FORM I-526, IMMIGRANT PETITION BY ALIEN ENTREPRENEUR

The Petitioner seeks classification as an immigrant investor. See Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act) section 203(b)(5), 8 U.S.C. § 1153(b)(5). This fifth preference (EB-5) classification makes immigrant visas available to foreign nationals who make a qualifying equity investment of the requisite amount in a new commercial enterprise (NCE) that will benefit the United States economy and create at least 10 full-time positions for qualifying employees. An immigrant investor may invest the required funds directly in a NCE, or through a “regional center.”¹ Regional centers apply for designation as such with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS). Designated regional centers identify and work with NCEs, which in turn are associated with a specific investment project, either taken on directly by the NCE or by one or more separate entities known as the “job creating entity” (JCE). Regional centers can pool immigrant (and other) investor funds for qualifying projects that create jobs directly or indirectly. 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(j)(4)(iii).

The Chief of the Immigrant Investor Program Office denied the Form I-526, Immigrant Petition by Alien Entrepreneur, concluding that the record did not establish, as required, that the Petitioner placed his capital at risk in [REDACTED] the NCE. Specifically, he determined that he did not demonstrate he would risk suffering a loss on his investment consistent with an equity interest.

On appeal, the Petitioner submits a recent U.S. district court decision addressing the issue before us. He asserts that the provision in the NCE’s Limited Partnership Agreement, which allows the general partner, [REDACTED] to redeem his interest for a specified price, was permissible, and that this arrangement is consistent with an equity investment in the NCE. In June 2017, we issued a request for evidence (RFE), to which the Petitioner responded.

Upon de novo review, we will dismiss the appeal.

I. LAW

A foreign national may be classified as an immigrant investor if he or she invests the requisite amount of qualifying capital in a NCE. To invest means to place capital at risk for the purpose of generating a return on the capital. 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(j)(2). The definition of “invest” excludes debt arrangements between the investor and the NCE. 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(e) (defining “invest”). In addition, the foreign national must show that his or her investment will benefit the United States economy and create at least 10 full-time jobs for qualifying employees.

An individual seeking classification as an immigrant investor files a Form I-526 petition. If USCIS grants the petition and an application to adjust status, the investor receives conditional permanent resident status. Approaching the end of a two-year period of conditional status, the investor must request that the conditions be removed by filing a Form I-829, Petition by Entrepreneur to Remove Conditions. If USCIS determines that the investor has met all program requirements, it will remove the conditions and grant (unconditional) lawful permanent resident status.

II. ANALYSIS

The NCE proposes to finance the development of a multi-family housing project through the Wisconsin-Illinois EB-5 Regional Center. The NCE’s Limited Partnership Agreement, Article 9.1, contains a provision whereby, once an investor becomes an unconditional permanent resident, the general partner may, in its sole discretion, notify that investor of its desire to purchase (i.e. redeem)² his or her interest. The cash purchase price is equal to all accrued and unpaid preferred returns and 100 percent of the investor’s capital contribution in the NCE. The agreement specifies that “preferred return” is “one half of one percent (0.5%) per annum on the total unreturned Capital Contributions [$500,000]” of an investor.

A. Debt Arrangement

While the Chief referenced a guaranteed return of capital, he ultimately concluded in his denial of the petition that Article 9.1 was “indicative of a prohibited debt arrangement” and that “each of the investors appears to have entered into his or her investment assured that he or she will be repaid a fixed rate of return and redemption of . . . capital in the buyout option.” On appeal, the Petitioner provides a copy of Doe v. USCIS, 239 F. Supp. 3d 297 (D.D.C. 2017). In that decision, the U.S. district court found that a similar provision gave a purchasing right to the general partner, not a selling right to the investor, and, thus, “did not guarantee [the investor] anything.” Id. at 302. Rather, the general partner’s option to purchase the investor’s interest could “act as a ceiling on the ² While the specific language of this provision is phrased as a purchase of the investor’s interest by the general partner, the agreement does not specify that entity would redeem the interest from its own account; rather, presumably it would do so from partnership assets. Even if the general partner did use its own funds, the result for the investor would be the same—a pre-agreed purchase arrangement to effectuate repayment of the investor’s interest at an agreed upon time and price.

return.” Id. at 306-07. The Petitioner notes that the regulations do not define “debt arrangement” and relies on a 2013 policy memorandum for the proposition that there must be a contractual agreement to repay the investor.³

The federal case law the Petitioner cites on appeal does not resolve the issue before us. In contrast to the broad precedential authority of a U.S. circuit court decision, we are not bound to follow a published decision of a U.S. district court even in cases arising within the same district. See Matter of K-S-, 20 I&N Dec. 715 (BIA 1993). The reasoning underlying a district judge’s decision will be given due consideration when it is properly before us; however, the analysis does not have to be followed as a matter of law. Id. at 719. Regardless, the issue before the district court was whether a call option constitutes a “guaranteed return.”⁴ Our concern here is, specifically, whether Article 9.1 constitutes an impermissible “debt arrangement.” See 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(e). For the reasons discussed below, we find that it does.

The regulatory language at 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(e) broadly prohibits “contributions of capital in exchange for a note, bond, convertible debt, obligation, or any other debt arrangement,” allowing us to look beyond the form of any particular transaction and examine its substance in order to determine whether it is, in fact, prohibited. Specifically, the use of the general term “arrangement” in addition to the other regulatory examples reveals that the definition does not only preclude explicit loans where one party has a legal obligation to repay another. Rather, our analysis of the phrase “any other debt arrangement” requires an inquiry beyond just the rights of any one side to the arrangement. Moreover, we do not find the analysis in prior USCIS policy or precedent decisions to be exhaustive of all the terms that might constitute a debt arrangement.

In this case, we start by looking to the language in both the Limited Partnership Agreement and the Confidential Private Offering Memorandum, which the Petitioner presented at the time of filing his petition.⁵ Article 9.1 of the partnership agreement provides that at any time on or after the date that a foreign investor’s Form I-829 has been adjudicated, the NCE’s general partner may, in its sole discretion, notify the investor of its desire to purchase (i.e. redeem) his or her interest. The purchase price will include 100 percent of his or her capital contribution ($500,000) plus all accrued and unpaid preferred returns. Both parties signed this document, agreeing to the arrangement within it. In addition, page 14 of the offering memorandum reiterates that the general partner has the right to purchase each foreign investor’s interest after USCIS’ adjudication of his or her Form I-829 as part of its exit strategy.⁶ A review of the record as a whole reveals an arrangement where, once the

conditions on the Petitioner's resident status have been removed, the NCE would likely redeem the Petitioner's original capital contribution and pay him or her a modest "preferred return," similar to an interest payment. Such an arrangement, though not characterized as a loan in the offering documents, contains the same elements (principal, interest, repayment period) that one would find in a debt agreement.⁷

The fact that the general partner has the right to purchase or redeem, which the partnership agreement references as a "buyout right," rather than the Petitioner having a right to sell his interest is not determinative. We previously found that a sell option was an impermissible debt arrangement regardless of whether it was enforceable. Matter of Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. 169, 184 (Assoc. Comm'r 1998).⁸ Considering the partnership agreement and offering memorandum together, we find that the Petitioner did enter into an impermissible debt arrangement with an understanding that the general partner intended to repay the full investment plus preferred returns. This arrangement is not permitted under the broad language at 8 C.F.R. § 204.6(e) (defining "invest").

Finally, the limitation on and subsequent attempts to waive the general partner's buyout right do not change our analysis. The Petitioner notes that the partnership agreement provides that the call option is not available if it would adversely affect the adjudication of the foreign investor's Form I-829. In addition, the general partner has attempted to waive its buyout right. The focus of our inquiry, however, is on the fact the Petitioner entered into such a redemption agreement prior to the end of the conditional residence period, and not the limitations on exercising the option. See Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. at 186-87. Any attempt to waive that right after the date of filing would constitute an impermissible material change. Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. at 175.⁹ Accordingly, these factors do not alter our finding that the Petitioner entered into an impermissible debt arrangement when making his investment.

B. Risk

While not raised by the Chief, the record contains an unresolved concern regarding the Petitioner's level of risk. He borrowed his funds from [REDACTED], [REDACTED] secured by property as well as his equity in and future distributions from that company. These amounts, however, do not sufficiently secure the 3.52 million Renminbi (RMB) loan he received. The investment of cash obtained as a loan from a third party is not simply an investment of cash that need not be examined further. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 162 (Assoc. Comm'r agree to assume all of the obligations to the [foreign investors] until such time as all [of them] have received final adjudication of their I-829 Petition."

⁷ On a related note, by setting a redemption price, there is no chance that the sales price might be surprisingly high. Matter of Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. 169, 186-87 (Assoc. Comm'r 1998).

⁹ That decision further adopts Matter of Bardouille, 18 I&N Dec. 114 (BIA 1981), for the proposition that we cannot "consider facts that come into being only subsequent to the filing of a petition." Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. at 176.

1998), states: “A petitioner must also establish, pursuant to 8 CFR § 204.6(e), that funds invested are his own. The petitioner has already conceded that the funds lent to Ames are not his; the funds belong to his father and must be repaid.” 22 I&N Dec. at 165 n.3. As the proceeds of a third party loan represent indebtedness, the assets securing the note must be specifically identified, belong to the petitioner personally, and have an adequate fair market value. Matter of Hsiung, 22 I&N Dec. 201, 203-204 (Assoc. Comm’r 1998). The record demonstrates that the Petitioner’s property was valued at RMB 1,471,613 in 2008, but lacks an appraisal or other evidence demonstrating the value of the property at the time of the loan. The Petitioner has not established that the value of his property and his RMB 500,000 in equity provide sufficient collateral for a RMB 3.52 million loan and his future distributions are speculative. Thus, the Petitioner has not placed a sufficient amount of his own assets at risk.

C. Source of Funds

The record also does not resolve the lawful source of the Petitioner’s funds.¹⁰ In 2010, the Petitioner contributed RMB 500,000 to [REDACTED] acquiring a 60 percent interest. In August 2013, he borrowed RMB 3.52 million, which he then transferred to the NCE through a conduit. The record, however, does not demonstrate that he accumulated enough funds to make the 2010 investment in addition to purchasing property valued at nearly RMB 1.5 million in 2008. The record also contains insufficient information pertaining to the individual who transferred his investment funds to the United States.

The Petitioner’s earnings from 2004 through 2010 amount to RMB 1,720,800.¹¹ The record contains no evidence of additional household income. He has not clarified how he was able to accumulate sufficient funds to purchase property worth nearly RMB 1.5 million in 2008 in addition to his 2010 capital contribution of RMB 500,000 to [REDACTED]

The movement of funds in and out of his account is also insufficiently resolved. In our RFE, we noted that after he received the loan in August 2013, there were several large debits well before the account was replenished and he transferred the money to his conduit, [REDACTED] in January 2014. In response, the Petitioner contends that after making the loan, [REDACTED] required emergency funds to cover payments for goods, so he covered those payments, borrowed additional funds from his brother in law which he repaid, and was reimbursed the amount of the [REDACTED] loan before January 2014. The deposits marked as “goods payments” between August 2013 and January 2014 total millions of Renminbi more than the amount needed to reimburse the [REDACTED] loan. The Petitioner has not resolved the source of the large sums going in and out of what purports to be a personal and not a business account.

¹¹ He earned RMB 22,200 monthly in 2007 through 2010 and RMB 18,200 monthly during the prior three years.

Finally, the Petitioner has not sufficiently accounted for the actual funds [REDACTED] transferred to the United States on his behalf. As noted in our RFE, the Petitioner traced his borrowed funds to [REDACTED] account in China and funds from that individual's account in Hong Kong to the United States, but not between the Chinese and Hong Kong accounts. In response, the Petitioner explains that [REDACTED] already had sufficient funds in his Hong Kong account, and did not move funds there from China. As evidence of that individual's lawful accumulation of funds, the Petitioner offered a letter from [REDACTED] confirming that [REDACTED] earned RMB 500,000 as an annual salary and received RMB 1.5 million in profit distributions. The letter, however, does not clarify over how many years he has received this level income. Accordingly, it cannot account for the approximately RMB 3.4 million he exchanged for the $555,489.48 he transferred to the United States. For all of the reasons above, the Petitioner has not verified the lawful source of the funds he transferred to the NCE.

III. CONCLUSION

The Petitioner has not demonstrated that he has invested in the NCE; rather, she has entered into a debt arrangement with its general partner. In addition, he has not documented that he placed his own assets at risk or the lawful source of his funds.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
