John F. Grissom, Acting Chief
Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The Director, Vermont Service Center, denied the immigrant visa petition. The matter is now before the Administration Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed. The petition will be denied.

The petitioner seeks immigrant classification pursuant to section 204(a)(1)(B)(ii) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (“the Act”), 8 U.S.C. § 1154(a)(1)(B)(ii), as an alien battered or subjected to extreme cruelty by a United States lawful permanent resident.

On December 20, 2006, the director denied the petition, finding that the petitioner failed to establish a qualifying relationship with a lawful permanent resident of the United States and her eligibility for preference immigrant classification based on such a relationship.

On appeal, counsel for the petitioner asserts: that the petitioner was mistreated while her husband was in lawful status; that an Alien Relative Petition had been approved by legacy Immigration and Naturalization Services prior to the petitioner’s husband’s deportation; and that the petitioner filed her Form I-360, Petition for Amerasian, Widow(er), or Special Immigrant, when her husband was still a lawful permanent resident of the United States. Counsel submits an April 6, 1994 approval notice for a Form I-130 visa petition for spouse issued to the petitioner’s husband on behalf of the petitioner.

Section 204(a)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that an alien who is the spouse of a lawful permanent resident of the United States, who is a person of good moral character, who is eligible to be classified as an immediate relative, and who has resided with his or her spouse, may self-petition for immigrant classification if the alien demonstrates to the [Secretary of Homeland Security]:

- (aa) the marriage or the intent to marry the lawful permanent resident was entered into in good faith by the alien; and
- (bb) during the marriage or relationship intended by the alien to be legally a marriage, the alien or a child of the alien has been battered or has been the subject of extreme cruelty perpetrated by the alien’s spouse or intended spouse.

A spouse may file a self-petition under section 204(a)(1)(A)(iii) or 204(a)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act for his or her classification as an immigrant relative or as a preference immigrant if he or she:

- (A) Is the spouse of a citizen or lawful permanent resident of the United States;
- (B) Is eligible for immigrant classification under section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) or 203(a)(2)(A) of the Act based on that relationship;

The petitioner in this matter is a native and citizen of the Dominican Republic. The petitioner married P-R-¹ in the Dominican Republic on December 18, 1988. At the time of their marriage P-R- claimed to be a lawful permanent resident of the United States. In an August 20, 2002 affidavit, submitted in support of the petitioner's Form I-485, Application to Register Permanent Residence or Adjust Status, the petitioner declares that she has been separated from her husband since 1998 and as far as she knows her husband is living in the Dominican Republic. The record does not provide evidence of the petitioner's first entry into the United States or whether the entry was without inspection. According to U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) records, on January 18, 2005 P-R- was ordered removed from the United States based on a conviction for attempted criminal sale of a controlled substance. The petitioner filed this Form I-360 on April 3, 2006, more than seven years after she separated from her husband and more than one year after her husband was ordered removed from the United States.

On August 31, 2006, the director issued a Notice of Intent to Deny (NOID) the petition, noting deficiencies in the record and affording the petitioner the opportunity to submit further evidence to establish that she had a qualifying relationship as the spouse of a lawful permanent resident of the United States, her corresponding eligibility for preference classification, and that she or her children had been subjected to battery or extreme cruelty perpetrated by her husband. Counsel for the petitioner provided a response to the NOID on October 26, 2006. The petitioner, in an October 25, 2006 statement, indicated that ten days after she and her husband were married (December 28, 1988) they decided to live in the United States. As noted above, the record does not include evidence regarding the petitioner's initial entry into the United States. The petitioner also claimed in the October 25, 2006 statement that after her marriage she suffered abuse perpetrated by her husband until December of 1998 when her husband went to the Dominican Republic and never returned. The petitioner also provided several affidavits from friends and family and a report of an initial psychosocial assessment prepared June 8, 2000. The director determined that the petitioner had provided sufficient evidence to establish that she had been battered by her spouse. The director denied the petition, however, because the petitioner did not establish that she had a qualifying relationship at the time of filing. The director did not address any evidence establishing that the petitioner is a person of good moral character.

The AAO finds that section 204(a)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act requires that the petitioner establish that she is married to a permanent resident at the time of the filing of the Form I-360 petition unless he or she establishes that the loss of the spouse's lawful permanent resident status during the two-year period prior to filing the Form I-360 was due to an incident of domestic violence. See section 204(a)(1)(B)(ii)(II)(aa)(CC)(aaa) of the Act. In this matter, the record shows that the petitioner's spouse was ordered removed on January 18, 2005 from the United States; thus when the petition was filed on April 3, 2006, the petitioner was not married to a lawful permanent resident. The petitioner has not established that she was the spouse of a lawful permanent resident at the time of the filing of the instant petition. The petitioner's spouse was ordered removed for a prior conviction relating to attempted sale of a controlled substance. Thus, the removal was not due to an incident of domestic violence. There is no other exception in the statute for the two-year filing period for aliens whose spouses have lost their United States citizenship or lawful permanent resident status prior to filing.

The petitioner's submission of an approval notice of a Form I-130 visa petition and counsel's assertions on appeal do not overcome the director's stated reasons for denial. The issue is whether the petitioner was the spouse of a lawful permanent resident when she filed the petition or that she qualifies for the exception to this criterion. Counsel has not provided evidence that the petitioner satisfies this criterion or is eligible for an exception to the criterion and thus is eligible for this benefit. Without documentary evidence to support the claim, the assertions of counsel will not satisfy the petitioner's burden of proof. The unsupported assertions of counsel do not constitute evidence. Matter of Obaigbena, 19 I&N Dec. 533, 534 (BIA 1988); Matter of Laureano, 19 I&N Dec. 1 (BIA 1983); Matter of Ramirez-Sanchez, 17 I&N Dec. 503, 506 (BIA 1980). The unsupported statements of counsel on appeal or in a motion are not evidence and thus are not entitled to any evidentiary weight. See INS v. Phinpathya, 464 U.S. 183, 188-89 n.6 (1984).

Beyond the decision of the director, the petitioner has not established that she was subjected to battery or extreme cruelty perpetrated by her spouse. The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 204.2(c)(2), in pertinent part, states:

(vi) Battery or extreme cruelty. For the purpose of this chapter, the phrase "was battered by or was the subject of extreme cruelty" includes, but is not limited to, being the victim of any act or threatened act of violence, including any forceful detention, which results or threatens to result in physical or mental injury. Psychological or sexual abuse or exploitation, including rape, molestation, incest (if the victim is a minor), or forced prostitution shall be considered acts of violence. Other abusive actions may also be acts of violence under certain circumstances, including acts that, in and of themselves, may not initially appear violent but that are a part of an overall pattern of violence. The qualifying abuse must have been committed by the citizen . . . spouse, must have been perpetrated against the self-petitioner . . . and must have taken place during the self-petitioner's marriage to the abuser.

The petitioner initially provided a psychosocial assessment prepared by [REDACTED], clinical social worker, reporting on an initial assessment of the petitioner that occurred on June 8, 2000. [REDACTED] noted that the petitioner reported symptoms of depression, including sleep disturbance, with insomnia, loss of appetite, low self-esteem, and feelings of helplessness since her husband had left her in late 1998. [REDACTED] further noted that the petitioner reported that her relationship with her husband was characterized by verbal aggression, emotional abuse, and lack of support.

In response to the NOID, the petitioner provided a personal statement. The petitioner indicated that at some point P-R- began to verbally offend her, humiliate her, and would not let her go out and work or receive any visitors at home. The petitioner further indicated that P-R- would call her names, tell her she was undocumented and say "remember, your mother is already death [sic], I can do whatever I want with you." The petitioner indicated that she was home alone, ignored all the time, and could not talk on the phone. The petitioner reported that once she was talking on the phone, P-R- took the phone and hit her on the head, telling her she was not allowed to use the phone. The petitioner reported a second incident when her family invited her to go to a baby shower, but after her family left, P-R- took his belt and hit her with it repeatedly, leaving marks on her body. The petitioner further reported that in December 1998, P-R- left for Santo Domingo to visit his ill mother and that he never returned. The petitioner stated her belief that P-R- left with another woman and she became very depressed.

The petitioner also provided her sister's, [REDACTED], October 25, 2006 affidavit. In the affidavit, [REDACTED] stated that the petitioner came to live with her after P-R- left because she was very depressed that her husband had left her and their children for another woman. [REDACTED] stated that she used to visit the petitioner and P-R- and witnessed the physical and verbal mistreatment of her sister, and on several occasions saw him "pushing her when passing on her side," ignoring her, and calling her derogatory names. The petitioner also provided an October 26, 2006 affidavit from [REDACTED]

P-R-'s uncle, who declared that "[the petitioner] was verbally abused any time I was visiting them." The petitioner further submitted an October 25, 2006 affidavit from [REDACTED], the petitioner's neighbor, who declared that he saw P-R- push the petitioner in the elevator and call her stupid and slow, as well as heard P-R- calling the petitioner names.

Upon review of the petitioner's statements and the affidavits submitted on her behalf, the AAO finds that these statements are general in nature and lack probative detail. The petitioner in her statement reported that her husband verbally abused her, kept her isolated, and on two occasions hit her. The petitioner however, did not report these incidents to the police and the record does not include any other information referencing these incidents. The petitioner, apparently, did not report these incidents to [REDACTED]. The petitioner has not provided the timing of these incidents. The record is insufficient to establish that the petitioner's husband subjected her to battery. Similarly, the petitioner has not established that P-R-'s behavior rose to the level of extreme cruelty, as described in the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 204.2(c)(1)(vi), which includes (but is not limited to) actions such as forceful detention, psychological or sexual abuse or exploitation, rape, molestation, incest, or forced prostitution.

The affidavits submitted do not include detailed information establishing that the petitioner's husband subjected her to battery or extreme cruelty during their marriage. The affiants provide general statements and do not describe when the verbal abuse occurred or otherwise describe in detail the circumstances surrounding the alleged abuse. Similarly, as the director noted in the NOID, the assessment prepared by [REDACTED], included vague statements and did not identify any particular incidents of abuse. The AAO finds further that [REDACTED] does not provide examples of any causal relationship of specific abuse to the petitioner's depression; rather it appears that the petitioner's depression was caused by the petitioner's husband leaving her.

As discussed above, the documentary evidence contained in the record is insufficient to establish the petitioner's claim of abuse. Accordingly, the petitioner failed to establish that she was battered or subjected to extreme cruelty by P-R- during their marriage, as required by section 204(a)(1)(A)(iii)(I)(bb) of the Act.

Beyond the decision of the director further, the petitioner has not supplied the necessary documentation to establish that she is a person of good moral character. The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 204.2(c)(2), in pertinent part, states:

(v) Good moral character. Primary evidence of the self-petitioner's good moral character is the self-petitioner's affidavit. The affidavit should be accompanied by a local police clearance or a state-issued criminal background check from each locality or state in the United States in which the self-petitioner has resided for six or more months during the 3-year period immediately preceding the filing of the self-petition. Self-petitioners who lived outside the United States during this time should submit a police clearance, criminal background check, or similar report issued by the appropriate authority in each foreign country in which he or she resided for six or more months during the 3-year period immediately preceding the filing of the self-petition. If police clearances, criminal background checks, or similar reports are not available for some or all locations, the self-petitioner may include an explanation and submit other evidence with his or her affidavit. The Service will consider other credible evidence of good moral character, such as affidavits from responsible persons who can knowledgeably attest to the self-petitioner's good moral character.

The record does not include evidence regarding clearances from the State of New York where the petitioner resided. Accordingly, the petitioner has failed to establish that she is a person of good moral character, as required by section 204(a)(1)(A)(iii)(II)(bb) of the Act.

An application or petition that fails to comply with the technical requirements of the law may be denied by the AAO even if the Service Center does not identify all of the grounds for denial in the initial decision. See Spencer Enterprises, Inc. v. United States, 229 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1043 (E.D. Cal. 2001), aff'd. 345 F.3d 683 (9th Cir. 2003); see also Dor v. INS, 891 F.2d 997, 1002 n. 9 (2d Cir. 1989)(noting that the AAO reviews appeals on a de novo basis).

The petition will be denied for the above stated reasons, with each considered as an independent and alternative basis for denial. In visa petition proceedings, the burden of proving eligibility for the benefit sought remains entirely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. The petitioner has not sustained that burden.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed. The petition is denied.
