Perry Rhew
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The Director, California Service Center, denied the nonimmigrant visa petition and the matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed. The petition will be denied.

The petitioner describes itself as a provider of end-to-end IT solutions and consulting services for medium/large enterprises and indicates that it currently employs 15 persons. It seeks to employ the beneficiary as a programmer analyst. The petitioner, therefore, endeavors to classify the beneficiary as a nonimmigrant worker in a specialty occupation pursuant to section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b).

The director denied the petition because the petitioner failed to establish that it qualifies as a U.S. employer or agent, that it has complied with the conditions of the labor condition application, and that the proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation.

On appeal, counsel states, in part, that the petitioner qualifies as an employer, as described in 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). Counsel also states that the petitioner has provided a certified labor condition application that covers the location of the job, as well as a valid contract and work order. As supporting documentation, counsel submits a letter dated September 26, 2008, from the president of [REDACTED] who states, in part, that the petitioner has hired the beneficiary to design, develop, and implement a hair salon software application for [REDACTED]. Counsel also submits previously submitted documentation, including an itinerary for the beneficiary indicating that he will work on projects at [REDACTED] in Irvine, California through September 2011.

When filing the I-129 petition, the petitioner described itself in its March 26, 2008 letter of support as “providing end-to-end IT solutions & consulting services for medium/large enterprises.”

The director found the initial evidence insufficient to establish eligibility for the benefit sought, and issued a request for evidence (RFE) on April 26, 2008. In the request, the director asked the petitioner to submit additional evidence, including a detailed itinerary for the beneficiary. The director requested documentation such as: contractual agreements with the actual end-client firm where the beneficiary would work; copies of the petitioner’s present and past vacancy announcements; documentary examples of the petitioner’s products or services; and documentation of past employment practices pertaining to H-1B employees.

In response to director’s RFE, counsel submitted additional evidence including the following: an itinerary for the beneficiary, discussed above; a purchase order signed by representatives of [REDACTED] and the petitioner on March 6, 2008 and March 7, 2008, respectively, assigning the beneficiary to perform software programmer analyst duties for [REDACTED] from October 10, 2008 through December 17, 2010; a software services agreement signed by representatives of ABCINCORP and the petitioner on March 5, 2008 and March 6, 2008, respectively, whereby the petitioner would provide qualified personnel to [REDACTED] to perform software services.

On September 3, 2008, the director denied the petition. The director found that the petitioner had failed to establish that it qualifies as a U.S. employer or agent, that it has complied with the conditions of the labor condition application, and that the proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation.

Section 214(i)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), defines the term "specialty occupation" as an occupation that requires:

- (A) theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and
- (B) attainment of a bachelor's or higher degree in the specific specialty (or its equivalent) as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii):

Specialty occupation means an occupation which requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge in field of human endeavor including, but not limited to, architecture, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine and health, education, business specialties, accounting, law, theology, and the arts, and which requires the attainment of a bachelor's degree or higher in a specific specialty, or its equivalent, as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, the position must meet one of the following criteria:

1. A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
2. The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
3. The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or
4. The nature of the specific duties are so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

As a threshold issue, it is noted that 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must logically be read together with section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), and 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). In other words, this regulatory language must be construed in harmony with the thrust of the related provisions and with the statute as a whole. See K Mart Corp. v. Cartier Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 291 (1988) (holding that construction of language which takes into account the design of the statute as a whole is preferred); see also COIT Independence Joint Venture v. Federal Sav. and Loan Ins. Corp., 489 U.S. 561 (1989); Matter of W-F-, 21 I&N Dec. 503 (BIA 1996). As such, the criteria stated in 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) should logically be read as being necessary but not necessarily sufficient to meet the statutory and regulatory definition of specialty occupation. To otherwise interpret this section as stating the necessary and sufficient conditions for meeting the definition of specialty occupation would result in particular positions meeting a condition under 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) but not the statutory or regulatory definition. See Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384, 387 (5th Cir. 2000). To avoid this illogical and absurd result, 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must therefore be read as stating additional requirements that a position must meet, supplementing the statutory and regulatory definitions of specialty occupation.

Consonant with section 214(i)(1) of the Act and the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii), USCIS consistently interprets the term “degree” in the criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) to mean not just any baccalaureate or higher degree, but one in a specific specialty that is directly related to the proffered position. Applying this standard, USCIS regularly approves H-1B petitions for qualified aliens who are to be employed as engineers, computer scientists, certified public accountants, college professors, and other such professions. These occupations all require a baccalaureate degree in the specific specialty as a minimum for entry into the occupation and fairly represent the types of professions that Congress contemplated when it created the H-1B visa category.

In addressing whether the proffered position is a specialty occupation, the record is unclear as to whether the beneficiary’s services would be that of a programmer analyst.

The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv) provides that “[a]n H-1B petition involving a specialty occupation shall be accompanied by [d]ocumentation . . . or any other required evidence sufficient to establish . . . that the services the beneficiary is to perform are in a specialty occupation.” Moreover, the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv)(A)(1) specifically lists contracts as one of the types of evidence that may be required to establish that the services to be performed by the beneficiary will be in a specialty occupation.

The petitioner’s letter of support dated March 26, 2008 listing the beneficiary’s proposed duties has been reviewed. The petitioner’s president indicated that the beneficiary would be a member of a team interacting with developers and product marketing in the performance of his duties as a programmer analyst.

On appeal, counsel states, in part, that the petitioner has provided sufficient evidence, including a valid contract, work order, and itinerary to show that the beneficiary will work on a project for [REDACTED]. The AAO acknowledges counsel’s statement on appeal that the beneficiary will work on-site at the petitioner’s client’s business location in Irvine, California. The record, however, contains insufficient information regarding the nature of the beneficiary's proposed position and accompanying duties in the context of ABCINCORP's hair salon software application project. The record does not contain a comprehensive description of the specific hair salon software application project to which the beneficiary would be assigned. Nor does the record contain a detailed description of the beneficiary's proposed duties in relation to this project. As such, the record contains insufficient evidence of the client projects to which the beneficiary would be assigned, and the petitioner fails to establish that the duties the beneficiary would perform in the context of such projects are those of a specialty occupation. Simply going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for the purpose of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

In support of this analysis, USCIS cites to Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384 (5th Cir. 2000) (hereinafter "Defensor"), in which an examination of the ultimate employment of the beneficiary was deemed necessary to determine whether the position constitutes a specialty occupation. The petitioner in Defensor, Vintage Health Resources (Vintage), was a medical contract service agency that brought foreign nurses into the United States and located jobs for them at hospitals as registered nurses. The court in Defensor found that Vintage had "token degree requirements," to "mask the fact that nursing in general is not a specialty occupation." Id. at 387.

The court in Defensor held that for the purpose of determining whether a proffered position is a specialty occupation, the petitioner acting as an employment contractor is merely a "token employer," while the entity for which the services are to be performed is the "more relevant employer." Id. at 388. The Defensor court recognized that evidence of the client companies' job requirements is critical where the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. The Defensor court held that the legacy Immigration and Naturalization Service had reasonably interpreted the statute and regulations as requiring the petitioner to produce evidence that a proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation on the basis of the requirements imposed by the entities using the beneficiary's services. Id. In Defensor, the court found that that evidence of the client companies' job requirements is critical if the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. Id.

In this matter, counsel states that the beneficiary would be performing programmer analyst duties for [REDACTED] on its hair salon software application project at [REDACTED] business location in Irvine, California. Despite the director's specific request for documentation to establish the actual job duties in relation to that project, however, the additional evidence submitted by the petitioner was insufficient. The AAO, therefore, cannot analyze whether the beneficiary's duties would require at least a baccalaureate degree or the equivalent in a specific specialty, as required for classification as a specialty occupation. Accordingly, the petitioner has not established that the proposed position qualifies as a specialty occupation under any of the criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) or that the beneficiary would be coming temporarily to the United States to perform the duties of a specialty occupation as that term is defined at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii).

Although the director also denied the petition because the petitioner had not demonstrated that it qualifies as a U.S. employer or agent and that it has complied with the conditions of the labor condition application, the AAO affirms, but shall not discuss, these additional issues because the petition is not approvable on the basis of the lack of a specialty occupation for the beneficiary.

In visa petition proceedings, the burden of proving eligibility for the benefit sought remains entirely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The director's decision is affirmed. The petition is denied.
