IN RE: Petitioner: [Redacted]
Beneficiary: [Redacted]

PETITION: Petition for a Nonimmigrant Worker Pursuant to Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b)

ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER:

INSTRUCTIONS:

This is the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office in your case. All documents have been returned to the office that originally decided your case. Any further inquiry must be made to that office.

If you believe the law was inappropriately applied or you have additional information that you wish to have considered, you may file a motion to reconsider or a motion to reopen. Please refer to 8 C.F.R. § 103.5 for the specific requirements. All motions must be submitted to the office that originally decided your case by filing a Form I-290B, Notice of Appeal or Motion, with a fee of $585. Any motion must be filed within 30 days of the decision that the motion seeks to reconsider or reopen, as required by 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(1)(i).

Perry Rhew
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The service center director denied the nonimmigrant visa petition and the matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed. The petition will be denied.

The petitioner is a software development and consulting company and seeks to employ the beneficiary as a programmer analyst. The petitioner endeavors to classify the beneficiary as a nonimmigrant worker in a specialty occupation pursuant to section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b).

The director denied the petition, finding that the petitioner failed to establish that (1) the proffered position qualified for classification as a specialty occupation; (2) a valid Labor Condition Application (LCA) was submitted for all work locations; and (3) the beneficiary was qualified to perform the duties of the proffered position. On appeal, counsel for the petitioner submits Form I-290B accompanied by a brief and additional evidence.

The first issue to be determined is whether the proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation.

Section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), defines the term “specialty occupation” as an occupation that requires:

- (A) theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and
- (B) attainment of a bachelor’s or higher degree in the specific specialty (or its equivalent) as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

The term “specialty occupation” is further defined at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii) as:

An occupation which requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge in fields of human endeavor including, but not limited to, architecture, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine and health, education, business specialties, accounting, law, theology, and the arts, and which requires the attainment of a bachelor’s degree or higher in a specific specialty, or its equivalent, as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, the position must meet one of the following criteria:

- (1) A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;
- (2) The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
- (3) The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or

- (4) The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) interprets the term “degree” in the above criteria to mean not just any baccalaureate or higher degree, but one in a specific specialty that is directly related to the proffered position.

The issue on appeal is whether the proffered position qualifies for classification as a specialty occupation. The petitioner, a software development and consulting company, employs 55 persons and seeks to employ the beneficiary as a programmer analyst for a period of three years, from September 30, 2007 to September 29, 2010. The LCA submitted with the petition certified the work location for a programmer analyst in Washington, D.C.

In a letter dated June 13, 2007, the petitioner stated that it “provides business and technology convergence solutions through IT consulting and services to Public sector and various industries to help them formulate and implement business transformation.” With regard to the beneficiary’s proposed duties, the petitioner stated that the primary function of the beneficiary’s position includes the following duties:

1. Review, analyze and modify computer systems including encoding, testing, debugging and installing to support the client’s application systems (approximately 20% of daily work time)
2. Design and develop software and programming systems to meet clients needs within time and cost constraints (approximately 20% of daily work time);
3. Writing the application programming [in] J2EE, Application Development using Java 1.4/1.3/1.2, Servlets 2x, JSP 1.2, Java Beans, Struts 1.2/1.1, JDBC 2.0, Applets, EJB 2.0, JMS, XML, SOAP, XSL, XSLT, CSS, HTML, Java Script, Web logic Application Server 9, UML, Win CVS, Oracle 9i, Junit, SQL, PL/SQL, and Unix ([a]pproximately 50% of daily work time)
4. Develop system definition, architecture, and detailed needs analysis including hardware and software recommendations (approximately 10% of daily work time)

On October 1, 2007, the director issued a request for evidence (RFE). In the request, the director requested that the petitioner submit copies of representative purchase contracts and/or purchase orders and/or invoices for the previous six months, as well as copies of its current purchase contracts, purchase orders and invoices. In a response dated October 8, 2007, the petitioner submitted a large number of contracts demonstrating projects and/or relationships that the petitioner had entered into with various clients.

In denying the petition, the director noted that of all contracts and documents submitted, only one pertained to the beneficiary. Specifically, the director noted that a subcontract agreement between the petitioner and High Impact Professionals, Inc. (HIP) was the only document that outlined the work requirements and duties of the beneficiary. The director noted that, according to the agreement, the beneficiary would provide services for Fannie Mae and an undisclosed location. However, the AAO notes that “DC” in parentheses after the name of Fannie Mae in item 4 of this agreement, which is a common abbreviation for Washington, DC. The director further noted that the end date of the work order was December 11, 2006, six months prior to the filing of the instant petition. The AAO finds that, in fact, the work order between the petitioner and HIP is valid for one year according to the terms of this agreement but, in any event, this would make the agreement valid only until May 22, 2007, which still does not cover the LCA validity dates of September 30, 2007 to September 29, 2010. No documents were submitted to demonstrate that the work order was renewed. In addition, the work order provided no description of the work the beneficiary would perform.

The director found that the petitioner had not provided a complete description of duties for the beneficiary and therefore could not conclude that the beneficiary would be employed in a specialty occupation position for the duration of the beneficiary's requested stay.

On appeal, counsel contends that the director failed to apply the law properly to the facts of the petition. Counsel contends that the proffered position is, in fact, a specialty occupation, and submits evidence that the proffered position requires a bachelor's degree. Counsel proceeds to deconstruct the four regulatory criteria of specialty occupation set forth at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), explaining how the beneficiary has satisfied each criterion. Finally, counsel for the petitioner relies on the decision in Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384 (5th Cir. 2000) and asserts that the director erroneously applied this case to the facts of the instant petition.

Upon review, the AAO concurs with the director's findings, and finds that the petitioner failed to provide sufficient evidence to establish that the services to be performed by the beneficiary are those of a specialty occupation.

As a threshold issue, it is noted that 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must logically be read together with section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), and 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). In other words, this regulatory language must be construed in harmony with the thrust of the related provisions and with the statute as a whole. See K Mart Corp. v. Cartier Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 291 (1988) (holding that construction of language which takes into account the design of the statute as a whole is preferred); see also COIT Independence Joint Venture v. Federal Sav. and Loan Ins. Corp., 489 U.S. 561 (1989); Matter of W-F-, 21 I&N Dec. 503 (BIA 1996). As such, the criteria stated in 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) should logically be read as being necessary, but not necessarily sufficient to meet the statutory and regulatory definition of specialty occupation. To otherwise interpret this section as stating the necessary and sufficient conditions for meeting the definition of specialty occupation would result in particular positions meeting a condition under 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), but not the statutory or regulatory definition. See Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384, 387 (5th Cir. 2000). To avoid this illogical and absurd result, 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must therefore be read as stating additional requirements that a position must meet, supplementing the statutory and regulatory definitions of specialty occupation.

Consonant with section 214(i)(1) of the Act and the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii), U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) consistently interprets the term "degree" in the criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) to mean not just any baccalaureate or higher degree, but one in a specific specialty that is directly related to the proffered position. Applying this standard, USCIS regularly approves H-1B petitions for qualified aliens who are to be employed as engineers, computer scientists, certified public accountants, college professors, and other such professions. These occupations all require a baccalaureate degree in the specific specialty as a minimum for entry into the occupation and fairly represent the types of professions that Congress contemplated when it created the H-1B visa category.

In addressing whether the proffered position is a specialty occupation, the record contains insufficient evidence as to where and for whom the beneficiary would be performing his services for the requested validity period, and whether his services would be that of a programmer analyst.

The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv) provides that “[a]n H-1B petition involving a specialty occupation shall be accompanied by [d]ocumentation . . . or any other required evidence sufficient to establish . . . that the services the beneficiary is to perform are in a specialty occupation.” Moreover, the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv)(A)(1) specifically lists contracts as one of the types of evidence that may be required to establish that the services to be performed by the beneficiary will be in a specialty occupation.

The petitioner’s letter of support dated June 13, 2007 provided a generic list of four areas which allegedly encompassed the beneficiary’s duties. However, no independent documentation to further explain the nature and scope of these duties was submitted. Noting that the petitioner, as a software development company, was engaged in an industry that typically outsourced its personnel to client sites to work on particular projects, the director requested documentation such as contracts and work orders, documentation that would outline for whom the beneficiary would render services and what his duties would include at each worksite. While the petitioner complied with the director’s request, only one document pertained specifically to the beneficiary. However, the work order relied upon by the petitioner expired in May 2007, over four months prior to the start date listed on this petition. Therefore, while this document may serve as a representative sample of the types of projects on which the beneficiary would work while in the United States, it did not pertain to the beneficiary’s actual duties during the three-year validity period requested by the petitioner.

As discussed above, the record contains simply the petitioner’s letter of support and the work order between the petitioner and HIP. However, these documents provide no details regarding the nature of the beneficiary’s proposed position and accompanying duties. Although many consulting agreements are submitted in support of the petition, none of these documents pertains to the beneficiary. Without evidence of contracts, work orders, or statements of work describing the duties the beneficiary would perform and for whom, the petitioner fails to establish that the duties that the beneficiary would perform are those of a specialty occupation. Providing a generic job description that speculates what the beneficiary may or may not do at each worksite is insufficient. Simply going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for the purpose of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. at 165.

As discussed above, counsel relies upon Defensor v. Meissner in support of the beneficiary’s eligibility in this matter. USCIS also routinely cites Defensor v. Meissner, in which an examination of the ultimate employment of the beneficiary was deemed necessary to determine whether the position constitutes a specialty occupation. The petitioner in Defensor, Vintage Health Resources (Vintage), was a medical contract service agency that brought foreign nurses into the United States and located jobs for them at hospitals as registered nurses. The court in Defensor found that Vintage had “token degree requirements,” to “mask the fact that nursing in general is not a specialty occupation.” 201 F.3d at 387.

The court in Defensor held that for the purpose of determining whether a proffered position is a specialty occupation, the petitioner acting as an employment contractor is merely a “token employer,” while the entity for which the services are to be performed is the “more relevant employer.” Id. at 388. The Defensor court recognized that evidence of the client companies’ job requirements is critical where the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. The Defensor court held that the legacy Immigration and Naturalization Service had reasonably interpreted the statute and regulations as requiring the petitioner to produce evidence that a proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation on the basis of the requirements imposed by the entities using the beneficiary’s services. Id. In Defensor, the court found that evidence of the client companies’ job requirements is critical if the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. Id.

On appeal, counsel seeks to distinguish Defensor from the facts of the instant case, arguing that nursing positions generally do not require a bachelor’s degree, whereas the position of programmer analyst does require such a degree. Counsel’s assertion, while generally correct, is insufficient to overcome the director’s denial in this matter. While a bachelor’s degree, according to the 2008-2009 edition of the Occupational Outlook Handbook (Handbook), is the minimum educational requirement for many programmer and systems analyst positions, it does not indicate that the degrees held by such workers must be in a specific specialty. Counsel focuses solely on the degree requirement in this matter, and overlooks the main basis for the director’s denial, which focuses on the lack of specific detail regarding the proffered position.

Upon review, while not addressed specifically by the director, it is unclear whether the petitioner will be an employer or will act as an employment contractor. The job description provided by the petitioner, as well as various statements from the petitioner both prior to adjudication and on appeal, indicate that the beneficiary will be working on client projects and will be assigned to various clients worksites when contracts are executed. The record is devoid of evidence, other than the expired agreement with HIP, to establish the ultimate location(s) of the beneficiary’s employment. Moreover, the petitioner’s failure to provide evidence of work orders or employment contracts between the petitioner and its clients renders it impossible to conclude for whom the beneficiary will ultimately provide services and exactly what those services would entail. The AAO, therefore, cannot analyze whether the beneficiary’s duties at each worksite would require at least a baccalaureate degree or the equivalent in a specific specialty, as required for classification as a specialty occupation. Accordingly, the petitioner has not established that the proposed position qualifies as a specialty occupation under any of the criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) or that the beneficiary would be coming temporarily to the United States to perform the duties of a specialty occupation pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(1)(B)(I).

The director also determined that the beneficiary would not be qualified to work in the proffered position even if it had been found to be a specialty occupation. However, a beneficiary’s credentials to perform a particular job are relevant only when the job is found to be a specialty occupation. As discussed in this decision, the proffered position does not require a baccalaureate or higher degree, or its equivalent, in a specific specialty. Moreover, the duties for the position, described by the petitioner, are primarily related to computer programming. The petitioner provides no documentation evidencing how the beneficiary’s degree, found to be equivalent to a bachelor degree in business administration (and not an MBA as mistakenly argued by the petitioner in the brief), is relevant to a position in computer programming.

The next issue is whether the petitioner submitted a valid LCA for all work locations, as required by 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(2)(i)(B). The director specifically noted that the LCA listed the beneficiary's work location as Washington, D.C. In reviewing the petitioner's supporting documentation, the director noted that the record contained no documentation to support a finding that the beneficiary will be employed in Washington, D.C. during the entire requested validity period. On appeal, counsel contends that "since the beneficiary is working at Fannie Mae, which is located in Washington, DC, there is no basis for the Service to allege that the petitioner failed to obtain a proper LCA."

There are several problems with this assertion. First, the record contains insufficient evidence that the beneficiary will work for Fannie Mae while in the United States. In response to the RFE, the petitioner submitted an expired work order with HIP for the beneficiary's services, to be performed at Fannie Mae. On appeal, counsel submits for the first time an additional work order between the petitioner and HIP, intended to serve as a one-year extension of the expired work order submitted in response to the RFE. It is noted that this agreement was executed on June 12, 2007.

The regulation states that the petitioner shall submit additional evidence as the director, in his or her discretion, may deem necessary. The purpose of the request for evidence is to elicit further information that clarifies whether eligibility for the benefit sought has been established, as of the time the petition is filed. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 103.2(b)(8) and (12). The failure to submit requested evidence that precludes a material line of inquiry shall be grounds for denying the petition. 8 C.F.R. § 103.2(b)(14).

Where, as here, a petitioner has been put on notice of a deficiency in the evidence and has been given an opportunity to respond to that deficiency, the AAO will not accept evidence offered for the first time on appeal. See Matter of Soriano, 19 I&N Dec. 764 (BIA 1988); see also Matter of Obaigbena, 19 I&N Dec. 533 (BIA 1988). If the petitioner had wanted the submitted evidence to be considered, it should have submitted the documents in response to the director's RFE, issued on October 1, 2007. Id. As noted above, since this document was executed on June 12, 2007, this document was readily available and should have been submitted at that time in support of the petitioner's claim. Under the circumstances, the AAO need not and does not consider the sufficiency of this document submitted on appeal.

Even if the petitioner had established a valid work order for the beneficiary to provide services for Fannie Mae, there is no evidence in the record demonstrating that the beneficiary's services would be rendered in Washington, D.C. While counsel claims that Fannie Mae is in fact located in Washington, D.C., no documentary evidence to support this claim was submitted. Without documentary evidence to support the claim, the assertions of counsel will not satisfy the petitioner's burden of proof. The unsupported assertions of counsel do not constitute evidence. Matter of Obaigbena, 19 I&N Dec. at 534; Matter of Laureano, 19 I&N Dec. 1 (BIA 1983); Matter of Ramirez-Sanchez, 17 I&N Dec. 503, 506 (BIA 1980).

Finally, even if the petitioner had established that the beneficiary had a work assignment in Washington, D.C., it is questionable whether the beneficiary would be employed at one location throughout the validity period. The petitioner's June 13, 2007 letter and the various consulting and subcontractor agreements submitted prior to adjudication indicate that the petitioner's clients include companies throughout the United States. Assuming that these contracts are representative samples of contracts under which the beneficiary may be contracted to perform services, they further support the conclusion that the submitted LCA location of only Washington, D.C. is invalid. Absent end-agreements with clients, the duration and location of work sites to which the beneficiary will be sent during the course of his employment cannot be determined. There is no evidence to support a finding that the beneficiary will work in Washington, D.C. for the duration of the validity period. Therefore, the AAO cannot conclude that the LCA submitted is valid and covers all of the beneficiary's work locations. For this additional reason, the petition may not be approved.

Beyond the decision of the director, the petitioner has failed to establish that it meets the regulatory definition of an intending United States employer. Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Act; 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). Specifically, the AAO must determine whether the petitioner has established that it will have "an employer-employee relationship with respect to employees under this part, as indicated by the fact that it may hire, pay, fire, supervise, or otherwise control the work of any such employee." 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii)(2).

Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b), defines H-1B nonimmigrants as an alien:

(i) who is coming temporarily to the United States to perform services . . . in a specialty occupation described in section 1184(i)(1) . . . , who meets the requirements of the occupation specified in section 1184(i)(2) . . . , and with respect to whom the Secretary of Labor determines . . . that the intending employer has filed with the Secretary an application under 1182(n)(1).

"United States employer" is defined in the Code of Federal Regulations at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii) as follows:

United States employer means a person, firm, corporation, contractor, or other association, or organization in the United States which:

- (1) Engages a person to work within the United States;
- (2) Has an employer-employee relationship with respect to employees under this part, as indicated by the fact that it may hire, pay, fire, supervise, or otherwise control the work of any such employee; and
- (3) Has an Internal Revenue Service Tax identification number.

Although "United States employer" is defined in the regulations, it is noted that "employee," "employed," "employment," and "employer-employee relationship" are not defined for purposes of the H-1B visa classification even though these terms are used repeatedly in both the Act and the regulations, including within the definition of "United States employer" at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Act indicates that an alien coming to the United States to perform services in a specialty occupation will have an "intending employer" who will file a labor condition application with the Secretary of Labor pursuant to section 212(n)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(n)(1). The intending employer is described as offering full-time or part-time "employment" to the H-1B "employee." Sections 212(n)(1)(A)(i) and 212(n)(2)(C)(vii) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. §§ 1182(n)(1)(A)(i) and 1182(n)(2)(C)(vii). Further, the regulations indicate that "United States employers" must file Form I-129 in order to classify aliens as H-1B temporary "employees." 8 C.F.R. §§ 214.2(h)(1) and 214.2(h)(2)(i)(A). Finally, the definition of "United States employer" indicates in its second prong that the petitioner must have an "employer-employee relationship" with the "employees under this part," i.e., the H-1B beneficiary, and that this relationship be evidenced by the employer's ability to "hire, pay, fire, supervise, or otherwise control the work of any such employee." 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii) (defining the term "United States employer"). Accordingly, neither the legacy Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) nor U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) has defined the terms "employee," "employed," "employment," or "employer-employee relationship" by regulation for purposes of the H-1B visa classification, even though the law describes H-1B beneficiaries as being "employees" who must have an "employer-employee relationship" with a "United States employer."¹ Therefore, for purposes of the H-1B visa classification, these terms are undefined.

The Supreme Court of the United States has determined that where federal law fails to clearly define the term "employee," courts should conclude that the term was "intended to describe the conventional master-servant relationship as understood by common-law agency doctrine." Nationwide Mutual Ins. Co. v. Darden, 503 U.S. 318, 322-323 (1992) (hereinafter "Darden") (quoting Community for Creative Non-Violence v. Reid, 490 U.S. 730 (1989)). That definition is as follows:

In determining whether a hired party is an employee under the general common law of agency, we consider the hiring party's right to control the manner and means by which the product is accomplished. Among the other factors relevant to this inquiry are the skill required; the source of the instrumentalities and tools; the location of the work; the duration of the relationship between the parties; whether the hiring party has the right to assign additional projects to the hired party; the extent of the hired party's discretion over when and how long to work; the method of payment; the hired party's role in hiring and paying assistants; whether the work is part of the regular business of the hiring party; whether the hiring party is in business; the provision of employee benefits; and the tax treatment of the hired party.

Darden, 503 U.S. at 323-324; see also Restatement (Second) of Agency § 220(2) (1958); Clackamas Gastroenterology Associates, P.C. v. Wells, 538 U.S. 440 (2003) (hereinafter "Clackamas"). As the common-law test contains "no shorthand formula or magic phrase that can be applied to find the answer, . . . all of the incidents of the relationship must be assessed and weighed with no one factor being decisive." Darden, 503 U.S. at 324 (quoting NLRB v. United Ins. Co. of America, 390 U.S. 254, 258 (1968)).²

² While the Darden court considered only the definition of "employee" under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. § 1002(6), and did not address the definition of "employer," courts have generally refused to extend the common law agency definition to ERISA's use of

Therefore, in considering whether or not one is an "employee" in an "employer-employee relationship" with a "United States employer" for purposes of H-1B nonimmigrant petitions, USCIS will focus on the common-law touchstone of control. Clackamas, 538 U.S. at 450. Factors indicating that a worker is an "employee" of an "employer" are clearly delineated in both the Darden and Clackamas decisions. 503 U.S. at 323-324; see also Restatement (Second) of Agency § 220(2) (1958). Such indicia of control include when, where, and how a worker performs the job; the continuity of the worker's relationship with the employer; the tax treatment of the worker; the provision of employee benefits; and whether the work performed by the worker is part of the employer's regular business. See Clackamas, 538 U.S. at 448-449; cf. New Compliance Manual, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, § 2-III(A)(1), (EEOC 2006) (adopting a materially identical test and indicating that said test was based on the Darden decision); see also Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384, 388 (5th Cir. 2000) (determining that hospitals, as the recipients of beneficiaries' services, are the true "employers" of H-1B nurses under 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h), even though a medical contract service agency is the actual employer because "the definition of 'employer' in ERISA, unlike the definition of 'employee,' clearly indicates legislative intent to extend the definition beyond the traditional common law definition." See, e.g., Bowers v. Andrew Weir Shipping, Ltd., 810 F. Supp. 522 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 27 F.3d 800 (2nd Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1000 (1994). However, in this matter, the Act does not exhibit a legislative intent to extend the definition of "employer" in section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Act, "employment" in section 212(n)(1)(A)(i) of the Act, or "employee" in section 212(n)(2)(C)(vii) of the Act beyond the traditional common law definitions. Instead, in the context of the H-1B visa classification, the term "United States employer" was defined in the regulations to be even more restrictive than the common law agency definition. A federal agency's interpretation of a statute whose administration is entrusted to it is to be accepted unless Congress has spoken directly on the issue. See Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 844-45 (1984).

The regulatory definition of "United States employer" requires H-1B employers to have a tax identification number, to employ persons in the United States, and to have an "employer-employee relationship" with the H-1B "employee." 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). Accordingly, the term "United States employer" not only requires H-1B employers and employees to have an "employer-employee relationship" as understood by common-law agency doctrine, it imposes additional requirements, thus indicating that the regulations do not indicate an intent to extend the definition beyond "the traditional common law definition." Therefore, in the absence of an intent to impose broader definitions by either Congress or USCIS, the "conventional master-servant relationship as understood by common-law agency doctrine," and the Darden construction test, apply to the terms "employee," "employer-employee relationship," "employed," and "employment" as used in section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Act, section 212(n) of the Act, and 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h). That being said, there are instances in the Act where Congress may have intended a broader application of the term "employer" than what is encompassed in the conventional master-servant relationship. See, e.g., section 214(c)(2)(F) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(c)(2)(F) (referring to "unaffiliated employers" supervising and controlling L-1B intracompany transferees having specialized knowledge); section 274A of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1324a (referring to the employment of unauthorized aliens).

petitioner, because the hospitals ultimately hire, pay, fire, supervise, or otherwise control the work of the beneficiaries).

It is important to note that the factors listed in Darden and Clackamas are not exhaustive and must be evaluated on a case-by-case basis. Other aspects of the relationship between the parties may affect the determination of whether an employer-employee relationship exists. Furthermore, not all or even a majority of the listed criteria need be met; however, the fact finder must weigh and compare a combination of the factors in analyzing the facts of each individual case. The determination must be based on all of the circumstances in the relationship between the parties, regardless of whether the parties refer to it as an employee or as an independent contractor relationship. See Clackamas, 538 U.S. at 448-449; New Compliance Manual at § 2-III(A)(1).

Likewise, the "mere existence of a document styled 'employment agreement'" shall not lead inexorably to the conclusion that the worker is an employee. Clackamas, 538 U.S. at 450. "Rather, as was true in applying common-law rules to the independent-contractor-versus-employee issue confronted in Darden, the answer to whether a shareholder-director is an employee depends on 'all of the incidents of the relationship . . . with no one factor being decisive.'" Id. at 451 (quoting Darden, 503 U.S. at 324).

Applying the Darden and Clackamas tests to this matter, the petitioner has not established that it or any of its clients will be a "United States employer" having an "employer-employee relationship" with the beneficiary as an H-1B temporary "employee."

To qualify as a United States employer, all three criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii) must be met. The Form I-129 and the petitioner's federal tax returns contained in the record indicate that the petitioner has an Internal Revenue Service Tax Identification Number. While the submission of the beneficiary's Wage and Tax Statements (Forms W-2) indicate the petitioner's engagement of the beneficiary to work in the United States, they merely establish the beneficiary's salary but provide no details regarding the nature of the job offered or its location. Moreover, the work order provided does not cover the three-year period requested in the petition. Therefore, the petitioner has failed to establish that an employer-employee relationship exists.

The minimal information contained in the petitioner's June 13, 2007 letter is not supported by documentary evidence that a valid employment agreement or credible offer of employment existed between the petitioner and the beneficiary. The petitioner did not submit an employment contract or any other document describing the beneficiary's claimed employment relationship with the petitioner. While the record contains the expired work order for the beneficiary's services with HIP, this document contains no details regarding the nature of the beneficiary's work with this company. Moreover, while the record contains a large number of other contracts between the petitioner and end clients such as Canon, USA, EDS-NASD, and AGS, these documents shed little light on the beneficiary's proposed position, since they (1) refer specifically to other subcontractors, not the beneficiary; and (2) provide no information regarding the nature of the work to be performed. As stated by the director in the denial, without evidence of contracts, work orders, or statements of work describing the duties the beneficiary would perform and for whom, the petitioner fails to establish that the duties that the beneficiary would perform are those of a specialty occupation. Simply going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for the purpose of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

The evidence, therefore, is insufficient to establish that the petitioner qualified as an employer, as defined by 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). Merely claiming in its letter dated June 13, 2007 that the petitioner will exercise complete control over the beneficiary, without evidence to support the claim, is insufficient to establish eligibility in this matter. The evidence of record prior to adjudication did not establish that the petitioner would act as the beneficiary's employer in that it will hire, pay, fire, or otherwise control the work of the beneficiary. Despite the director's request for evidence such as employment contracts or agreements, payroll records, or work orders to corroborate its claim, the petitioner failed to submit such evidence that relates specifically to the beneficiary.

Therefore, based on the tests outlined above, the petitioner has not established that it will be a "United States employer" having an "employer-employee relationship" with the beneficiary as an H-1B temporary "employee." 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii).

Moreover, the petitioner does not appear to be an agent. The definition of agent at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(2)(i)(F) provides for two types of agents: (1) "an agent performing the function of an employer"; and (2) "a company in the business as an agent involving multiple employers as the representative of both the employers and the beneficiary." Absent documentation such as work orders or contracts between the ultimate end clients and the beneficiary, the petitioner could not alternatively be considered an agent in this matter. As stated above, going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. at 165.

An application or petition that fails to comply with the technical requirements of the law may be denied by the AAO even if the Service Center does not identify all of the grounds for denial in the initial decision. See Spencer Enterprises, Inc. v. United States, 229 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1043 (E.D. Cal. 2001), aff'd. 345 F.3d 683 (9th Cir. 2003); see also Dor v. INS, 891 F.2d 997, 1002 n. 9 (2d Cir. 1989)(noting that the AAO reviews appeals on a de novo basis).

When the AAO denies a petition on multiple alternative grounds, a plaintiff can succeed on a challenge only if she shows that the AAO abused its discretion with respect to all of the AAO's enumerated grounds. See Spencer Enterprises, Inc. v. United States, 229 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1043 (E.D. Cal. 2001), aff'd. 345 F.3d 683 (9th Cir. 2003).

The petition will be denied for the above stated reasons, with each considered as an independent and alternative basis for denial. In visa petition proceedings, the burden of proving eligibility for the benefit sought remains entirely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed. The petition is denied.
