John F. Grissom
Acting Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The service center director denied the nonimmigrant visa petition and the matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed. The petition will be denied.

The petitioner is a software consulting and development company that seeks to continue its employment of the beneficiary as a programmer. The petitioner, therefore, endeavors to extend the beneficiary's classification as a nonimmigrant worker in a specialty occupation pursuant to section 101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(H)(i)(b).

The director denied the petition on the basis of his determination that the petitioner had failed to establish that the proposed position qualifies for classification as a specialty occupation.

The record of proceeding before the AAO contains the following: (1) the Form I-129 and supporting documentation; (2) the director's request for additional evidence; (3) the petitioner's response to the director's request; (4) the director's denial letter; and (5) the Form I-290B and supporting documentation. The AAO reviewed the record in its entirety before issuing its decision.

Section 214(i)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), defines the term "specialty occupation" as an occupation that requires:

- (A) theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge, and
- (B) attainment of a bachelor's or higher degree in the specific specialty (or its equivalent) as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii) states, in pertinent part, the following:

Specialty occupation means an occupation which requires theoretical and practical application of a body of highly specialized knowledge in field of human endeavor including, but not limited to, architecture, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine and health, education, business specialties, accounting, law, theology, and the arts, and which requires the attainment of a bachelor's degree or higher in a specific specialty, or its equivalent, as a minimum for entry into the occupation in the United States.

Pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A), to qualify as a specialty occupation, a proposed position must meet one of the following criteria:

- (1) A baccalaureate or higher degree or its equivalent is normally the minimum requirement for entry into the particular position;

- (2) The degree requirement is common to the industry in parallel positions among similar organizations or, in the alternative, an employer may show that its particular position is so complex or unique that it can be performed only by an individual with a degree;
- (3) The employer normally requires a degree or its equivalent for the position; or
- (4) The nature of the specific duties is so specialized and complex that knowledge required to perform the duties is usually associated with the attainment of a baccalaureate or higher degree.

As a threshold issue, it is noted that 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must logically be read together with section 214(i)(1) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1184(i)(1), and 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii). In other words, this regulatory language must be construed in harmony with the thrust of the related provisions and with the statute as a whole. See K Mart Corp. v. Cartier Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 291 (1988) (holding that construction of language which takes into account the design of the statute as a whole is preferred); see also COIT Independence Joint Venture v. Federal Sav. and Loan Ins. Corp., 489 U.S. 561 (1989); Matter of W-F-, 21 I&N Dec. 503 (BIA 1996). As such, the criteria stated in 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) should logically be read as being necessary but not necessarily sufficient to meet the statutory and regulatory definition of specialty occupation. To otherwise interpret this section as stating the necessary and sufficient conditions for meeting the definition of specialty occupation would result in particular positions meeting a condition under 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) but not the statutory or regulatory definition. See Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384, 387 (5th Cir. 2000). To avoid this illogical and absurd result, 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) must therefore be read as stating additional requirements that a position must meet, supplementing the statutory and regulatory definitions of specialty occupation.

Consonant with section 214(i)(1) of the Act and the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(ii), U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) consistently interprets the term “degree” in the criteria at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) to mean not just any baccalaureate or higher degree, but one in a specific specialty that is directly related to the proffered position. Applying this standard, USCIS regularly approves H-1B petitions for qualified aliens who are to be employed as engineers, computer scientists, certified public accountants, college professors, and other such professions. These occupations all require a baccalaureate degree in the specific specialty as a minimum for entry into the occupation and fairly represent the types of professions that Congress contemplated when it created the H-1B visa category.

In addressing whether the proposed position is a specialty occupation, the AAO finds that the record lacks evidence that the petitioner had secured work for the beneficiary to perform during the requested period of employment at the time it filed the petition.

The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv) provides that “[a]n H-1B petition involving a specialty occupation shall be accompanied by [d]ocumentation . . . or any other required evidence sufficient to establish . . . that the services the beneficiary is to perform are in a specialty occupation.” Moreover, the regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iv)(A)(1) specifically lists contracts as one of the types of evidence that may be required to establish that the services to be performed by the beneficiary will be in a specialty occupation.

The petitioner outlined the duties proposed for the beneficiary in its June 25, 2007 letter of support. According to the petitioner, the beneficiary would perform the following tasks:

- Design, develop, code, test, maintain, and customize Oracle Applications and modules including AOL, CRM, IB, OKS, INV, AR, and AP using various tools and technologies using Oracle, Developer 2000 (Forms & Reports), SQL, PL/SQL, SQL*Loader, TOAD, and SQL Navigator under Windows and UNIX operating systems;
- Code, test, and troubleshoot programs utilizing the appropriate hardware, database, and programming technologies;
- Implement ERP Oracle Applications, and maintain and modify programs;
- Make approved changes by amending flowcharts and developing detailed programming logic and coding changes;
- Test and implement programming modifications;
- Write new program code using prescribed specifications;
- Evaluate simple interrelationships between programs and analyze performance of programs;
- Take action to correct deficiencies based on project team and end user interactions;
- Analyze workflow charts and diagrams, subject matter, and symbolic logic;
- Convert detailed logical flowchart to language processable by computer;
- Confer with project team to resolve questions of program intent, data input, output requirements, and inclusion of internal checks and controls;
- Write instructions to guide operating personnel during production runs;
- Analyze, review, and rewrite programs to increase operating efficiency and adapt program to new requirements; and
- Compile and write documentation of program development and subsequent revisions.

In his December 26, 2007 request for additional evidence, the director requested, among other items, a complete itinerary with the dates and locations of services to be performed, as well as a contract with the end user of the beneficiary’s services which specifically named the beneficiary and discussed the services she would perform.

The petitioner responded to the director’s request for additional evidence on February 8, 2008. In her response, counsel stated that the beneficiary had been working on a project for Cisco, pursuant to a contract with JASS & Associates, Inc. (“JASS”). The petitioner also submitted an Information Technology Services Agreement between the petitioner and JASS, which was executed on March 20, 2006, as well as a purchase order executed on November 7, 2007 pursuant to the agreement. According to the purchase order, the beneficiary would provide services to Cisco, the end user, beginning on November 12, 2007. The petitioner, however, submitted no evidence directly from Cisco naming the beneficiary or describing the services to be performed, as specifically requested by the director. As such, the record of proceeding before the director at the time he issued the decision contained no description of the duties to be performed by the beneficiary from the entity (Cisco) for whom she would be performing such duties, and the director determined that the record lacked sufficient evidence for USCIS to make a determination as to whether the petitioner's proposed position qualified for classification as a specialty occupation.

On appeal, the petitioner submits a statement of work issued by Cisco, and signed by a representative of JASS on January 25, 2008. However, the AAO will not consider this document, as it was not executed until several months after the Form I-129 was filed at the service center on July 9, 2007.

The record lacks credible evidence that when the petitioner filed the petition the petitioner had secured work for the beneficiary to perform during the requested period of employment. USCIS regulations affirmatively require a petitioner to establish eligibility for the benefit it is seeking at the time the petition is filed. See 8 C.F.R. 103.2(b)(12). A visa petition may not be approved at a future date after the petitioner or beneficiary becomes eligible under a new set of facts. Matter of Michelin Tire Corp., 17 I&N Dec. 248 (Reg. Comm. 1978). Moreover, as stated in Matter of Izummi, 22 I&N Dec. 169, 176 (Assoc. Comm. 1998), "[t]he AAO cannot consider facts that come into being only subsequently to the filing of the petition."

Moreover, even if the statement of work from Cisco had been in existence at the time the Form I-129 was filed, it would still be deficient. First, the statement of work does not set forth the duties that would actually be performed by the beneficiary for Cisco pursuant to the statement of work. Nor is there any evidence that Cisco normally requires individuals providing such services to possess a bachelor's degree, or its equivalent, in a specific discipline. There is no information in this document that would allow the AAO to ascertain whether the duties the beneficiary would be performing pursuant to this document required the attainment of a bachelor's degree, or its equivalent, in a particular field of study.

Nor does the beneficiary's Cisco identification card allow the AAO to ascertain whether the duties she would perform for Cisco require the attainment of a bachelor's degree, or its equivalent, in a specific specialty.

Accordingly, the AAO finds that the record fails to contain any substantive evidence about any particular project on which the beneficiary would work during the period of requested employment. Without documentary evidence to support the claim, the assertions of counsel will not satisfy the petitioner's burden of proof. The unsupported assertions of counsel do not constitute evidence. Matter of Obaigbena, 19 I&N Dec. 533, 534 (BIA 1988); Matter of Laureano, 19 I&N Dec. 1 (BIA 1983); Matter of Ramirez-Sanchez, 17 I&N Dec. 503, 506 (BIA 1980).

In support of this analysis, USCIS routinely cites Defensor v. Meissner, 201 F.3d 384 (5th Cir. 2000), in which an examination of the ultimate employment of the beneficiary was deemed necessary to determine whether the position constitutes a specialty occupation. The petitioner in Defensor, Vintage Health Resources (Vintage), was a medical contract service agency that brought foreign nurses into the United States and located jobs for them at hospitals as registered nurses. The court in Defensor found that Vintage had “token degree requirements,” to “mask the fact that nursing in general is not a specialty occupation.” Id. at 387.

The court in Defensor held that for the purpose of determining whether a proposed position is a specialty occupation, the petitioner acting as an employment contractor is merely a “token employer,” while the entity for which the services are to be performed is the “more relevant employer.” Id. at 388. The Defensor court recognized that evidence of the client companies’ job requirements is critical where the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. The Defensor court held that the legacy Immigration and Naturalization Service had reasonably interpreted the statute and regulations as requiring the petitioner to produce evidence that a proffered position qualifies as a specialty occupation on the basis of the requirements imposed by the entities using the beneficiary’s services. Id. In Defensor, the court found that that evidence of the client companies’ job requirements is critical if the work is to be performed for entities other than the petitioner. Id.

The petitioner’s failure to establish the substantive nature of the work to be performed by the beneficiary precludes finding a specialty occupation under any criterion at 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(h)(4)(iii)(A) because it is the substantive nature of that work that determines: (1) the normal minimum educational requirement for the particular position, which is the focus of criterion 1; (2) industry positions which are parallel to the proffered position and thus appropriate for review for a common degree requirement, under the first alternate prong of criterion 2; (3) the level of complexity or uniqueness of the proffered position, which is the focus of the second alternate prong of criterion 2; (4) the factual justification for a petitioner normally requiring a degree or its equivalent, when that is an issue under criterion 3; and (5) the degree of specialization and complexity of the specific duties, which is the focus of criterion 4.

Also, at a more basic level, as reflected in this decision’s discussion of the evidentiary deficiencies, the record lacks credible evidence that when the petitioner filed the petition the petitioner had secured work of any type for the beneficiary to perform during the requested period of employment. Again, USCIS regulations affirmatively require a petitioner to establish eligibility for the benefit it is seeking at the time the petition is filed. See 8 C.F.R. 103.2(b)(12). A visa petition may not be approved at a future date after the petitioner or beneficiary becomes eligible under a new set of facts. Matter of Michelin Tire Corp., 17 I&N Dec. 248 (Reg. Comm. 1978). For this reason also, the appeal will be denied.

The appeal will be dismissed and the petition denied for the above stated reasons, with each considered as an independent and alternative basis for the decision. In visa petition proceedings, the burden of proving eligibility for the benefit sought remains entirely with the petitioner. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed. The petition is denied.
