DISCUSSION: The application was denied by the Field Office Director, Kendall, Florida. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record reflects that the applicant was born on [REDACTED] in Cuba. The applicant's parents are [REDACTED] and [REDACTED]. The applicant's parents were married in 1979, divorced in 1984, and remarried in 1985. The applicant's mother became a U.S. citizen upon her naturalization on June 6, 1989, when the applicant was 11 years old. The applicant was admitted to the United States as a lawful permanent resident on March 2, 1987, when he was nine years old. He presently seeks a certificate of citizenship claiming that he derived U.S. citizenship upon his mother's naturalization pursuant to former section 321 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1432 (repealed).

The field office director determined that the applicant could not derive U.S. citizenship under former section 321 of the Act because he could not establish that both his parents were naturalized U.S. citizens. The application was accordingly denied.

On appeal, the applicant, through counsel, maintains that he derived U.S. citizenship upon his mother's naturalization. Specifically, counsel states that the applicant was in his mother's legal custody pursuant to a separation agreement executed in conjunction with the applicant's parents' divorce. See Appeal Brief at 4-6. Counsel argues that "[t]he fact that the [applicant's] parents remarried . . . does not constitute a legal change in the Separation Agreement . . ." Id. at 5-6.

The applicable law for derivative citizenship purposes is "the law in effect at the time the critical events giving rise to eligibility occurred." Minasyan v. Gonzales, 401 F.3d 1069, 1075 (9th Cir. 2005). The Child Citizenship Act of 2000 (the CCA), Pub. L. No. 106-395, 114 Stat. 1631 (Oct. 30, 2000), which took effect on February 27, 2001, amended sections 320 and 322 of the Act, and repealed section 321 of the Act. The provisions of the CCA are not retroactive, and the amended provisions of section 320 and 322 of the Act apply only to persons who were not yet 18 years old as of February 27, 2001. The applicant's eighteenth birthday was on February 21, 1997. Because the applicant was over the age of 18 on February 27, 2001, he is not eligible for the benefits of the amended Act. See Matter of Rodriguez-Tejedor, 23 I&N Dec. 153 (BIA 2001). Former section 321 of the Act is therefore applicable in this case.

Former section 321 of the Act, stated, in pertinent part, that:

(a) A child born outside of the United States of alien parents, or of an alien parent and a citizen parent who has subsequently lost citizenship of the United States, becomes a citizen of the United States upon fulfillment of the following conditions:

(1) The naturalization of both parents; or

- (2) The naturalization of the surviving parent if one of the parents is deceased; or
- (3) The naturalization of the parent having legal custody of the child when there has been a legal separation of the parents or the naturalization of the mother if the child was born out of wedlock and the paternity of the child has not been established by legitimation; and if-
- (4) Such naturalization takes place while said child is under the age of 18 years; and
- (5) Such child is residing in the United States pursuant to a lawful admission for permanent residence at the time of the naturalization of the parent last naturalized under clause (1) of this subsection, or the parent naturalized under clause (2) or (3) of this subsection, or thereafter begins to reside permanently in the United States while under the age of 18 years.

The record indicates that the applicant obtained lawful permanent residency in 1987 and that his mother naturalized in 1989. The applicant has thus established that his U.S. citizen mother naturalized and that he was admitted to the United States as a lawful permanent resident prior to his eighteenth birthday.

The applicant's parents were married in 1979, divorced in 1984 and remarried in 1985. In conjunction with their 1984 divorce, the applicant's parents executed a separation agreement which awarded custody of the applicant to his mother. Counsel argues that the applicant's parents' marriage in 1985 did not legally alter the separation agreement. See Appeal Brief at 5-6.

Counsel's argument is not persuasive. The applicant's mother's naturalization was the last qualifying event under which the applicant could have derived citizenship. See Minasyan, 401 F.3d at 1075. At the time of the applicant's mother's naturalization, the applicant's parents were legally married. As such, the applicant could not derive U.S. citizenship solely through his mother. Pursuant to former section 321 of the Act, citizenship may be derived solely through one parent only when the other parent is deceased, where the child was born out of wedlock and paternity was not established by legitimation, or through the parent having custody of the applicant when there has been a legal separation of the parents. See Nehme, 252 F.3d 415, 425-26 (5th Cir. 2001) (recognizing that requiring the naturalization of both parents, when the parents were married, "was necessary to promote the child from being separated from an alien parent who has a legal right to custody"); see also Wedderburn v. INS, 215 F.3d 795, 800 (7th Cir. 2000) (explaining that "Congress rationally could conclude that as long as the marriage continues the citizenship of children should not change automatically with the citizenship of a single parent") (emphasis in original). The applicant's parents were not legally separated at the time of his mother's naturalization. Accordingly, the legal custody of the applicant at that time is not at issue in this case.

"There must be strict compliance with all the congressionally imposed prerequisites to the acquisition of citizenship." Fedorenko v United States, 449 U.S. 490, 506 (1981). The burden of proof in citizenship cases is on the claimant to establish the claimed citizenship by a preponderance of the evidence. See Section 341 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1452; 8 CFR § 341.2. The applicant has not met his burden of proof, and his appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
