John F. Grissom
Acting Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the District Director, Mexico City, Mexico, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record establishes that the applicant, a native and citizen of Mexico, entered the United States without authorization in April 1998 and did not depart the United States until January 2006. The applicant was thus found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year.¹ The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse and children.

The district director concluded that the applicant had failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on a qualifying relative and denied the Application for Waiver of Ground of Excludability (Form I-601) accordingly. Decision of the District Director, dated September 30, 2007.

On the Form I-290B, Notice of Appeal (Form I-290B), dated October 17, 2007, counsel indicated that a brief and/or additional evidence would be submitted within 30 days. No documentation was received by the AAO in support of the appeal until June 2009. Said evidence included a letter from counsel, dated May 19, 2009, and referenced exhibits. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision.

Section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General (Secretary) that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien...

Section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act provides that a waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is applicable solely where the applicant establishes extreme hardship to his or her citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent. Unlike waivers under section 212(h) of the Act, section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) does not mention extreme hardship to a United States citizen or lawful permanent resident child. Nor is extreme hardship to the applicant herself a permissible consideration under the statute. In the present case, the applicant's U.S. citizen spouse is the only qualifying relative, and hardship to the applicant and/or their children cannot be considered, except as it may affect the applicant's spouse.

In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565-66 (BIA 1999), the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate.

Relevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists. In each case, the trier of fact must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation. Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996). (Citations omitted).

The applicant contends that his U.S. citizen spouse will suffer hardship if the applicant's waiver request is not granted. In a declaration he states that their son, [REDACTED], requires surgery for multiple eye ailments, and such treatment is cost-prohibitive in Mexico. He notes that were the child to return to the United States, medical insurance would cover the costs of treatment. Letter and Translation from [REDACTED] dated May 15, 2009.

To begin, it has not been established that the applicant's spouse is suffering extreme hardship due to her husband's inadmissibility. Nor has it been established that the applicant's spouse is unable to relocate to the United States with her children, thereby ensuring that her son receives the medical treatment he needs. Alternatively, no documentation has been provided establishing that the applicant is unable to obtain the required surgery for his son in Mexico.² Finally, were his spouse to return to the United States, it has not been established that she would be unable to travel to Mexico, her native country, to visit her spouse on a regular basis. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

Although the depth of concern and anxiety over the applicant's inadmissibility is neither doubted or minimized, the fact remains that Congress provided for a waiver of inadmissibility only under limited circumstances. In nearly every qualifying relationship, whether between husband and wife or parent and child, there is a deep level of affection and a certain amount of emotional and social interdependence. While, in common parlance, the prospect of separation or involuntary relocation nearly always results in considerable hardship to individuals and families, in specifically limiting the availability of a waiver of inadmissibility to cases of "extreme hardship," Congress did not intend that a waiver be granted in every case where a qualifying relationship exists. The current state of the law, viewed from a legislative, administrative, or judicial point of view, requires that the hardship be above and beyond the normal, expected hardship involved in such cases. U.S. court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of removal are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991), Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996); Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996) (holding that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810 (BIA 1968) (holding that separation of family members and financial difficulties alone do not establish extreme hardship). "[O]nly in cases of great actual or prospective injury . . . will the bar be removed." Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246 (BIA 1984).

The AAO recognizes that the applicant's spouse will endure hardship as a result of continued separation from the applicant. However, her situation, if she remains in the United States, is typical to individuals separated as a result of removal and does not rise to the level of extreme hardship based on the record. The AAO concludes that based on the evidence provided, it has not been established that the applicant's U.S. citizen spouse will suffer extreme hardship were she to reside in the United States while the applicant remains abroad due to his inadmissibility.

The AAO notes that extreme hardship to a qualifying relative must also be established in the event that he or she relocates abroad based on the denial of the applicant's waiver request. The record indicates that the applicant's spouse is currently residing in Mexico with the applicant, and no documentation has been provided outlining the specific hardships she will face were she to remain in Mexico due to the applicant's inadmissibility. Although the applicant references that their son needs treatment that is cost-prohibitive in Mexico and their children are not in school while in Mexico, it has not been established, as noted above, that proper medical treatment is unavailable and/or cost-prohibitive in Mexico and/or that the children are unable to continue their studies while in Mexico, thereby ameliorating the referenced hardship to the applicant's spouse. Nor has any financial documentation been provided establishing financial hardship to the applicant's spouse in Mexico. Finally, as noted above, it has not been established that the applicant's spouse is unable to travel to the United States to obtain the required medical treatment for her son, and upon completion of said treatment, return to Mexico to reside with the applicant. As such, the applicant has failed to establish that his U.S. citizen spouse, a native of Mexico, would suffer extreme hardship were she to reside abroad with the applicant due to his inadmissibility.

² The AAO notes that the letter documenting the applicant's son's medical condition makes no reference to the fact that the recommended treatment is unavailable in Mexico and/or that the applicant and his spouse are unable to afford such treatment. Letter and Translation from [REDACTED] Real de Minas Hospital S.A de C.V., dated May 4, 2009.

As such, a review of the documentation in the record, when considered in its totality, reflects that the applicant has failed to show that his U.S. citizen spouse would suffer extreme hardship if he were not permitted to reside in the United States, and moreover, the applicant has failed to show that his U.S. citizen spouse would suffer extreme hardship were she to reside abroad with the applicant due to his inadmissibility. The record demonstrates that the applicant's spouse faces no greater hardship than the unfortunate, but expected, disruptions, inconveniences, and difficulties arising whenever a spouse is removed from the United States or refused admission. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether the applicant merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed. The waiver application is denied.
