IN RE:

APPLICATION: Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility under Section 212(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h)

ON BEHALF OF APPLICANT:

INSTRUCTIONS:

Enclosed please find the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office in your case. All of the documents related to this matter have been returned to the office that originally decided your case. Please be advised that any further inquiry that you might have concerning your case must be made to that office.

If you believe the law was inappropriately applied by us in reaching our decision, or you have additional information that you wish to have considered, you may file a motion to reconsider or a motion to reopen. The specific requirements for filing such a request can be found at 8 C.F.R. § 103.5. All motions must be submitted to the office that originally decided your case by filing a Form I-290B, Notice of Appeal or Motion. The fee for a Form I-290B is currently $630. Please be aware that 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(1)(i) requires that any motion be filed within 30 days of the decision that the motion seeks to reconsider or reopen.

Thank you,

Perry Rhew
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Boston, Massachusetts. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant, a native and citizen of Dominica, was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I), for having been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude. The record indicates that the applicant has a U.S. citizen spouse and lawful permanent resident daughter. The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(h) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h), in order to reside with her spouse in the United States.

In a decision, dated October 28, 2008, the director found that the applicant had been convicted of three shoplifting offenses. The director then found that two of these offenses qualified for the petty offense exception under section 212(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II) of the Act, but that the third shoplifting offense did not because it carried a maximum prison sentence of up to two years. The director thus found that it was only the applicant's third conviction that made her inadmissible under the Act. Finally, the director found that the applicant failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative as a result of her inadmissibility and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601) accordingly.

In his brief, counsel asserts that the applicant was only convicted of two shoplifting offenses as her 1995 guilty plea has been vacated pursuant to a motion to vacate guilty plea filed in 2008. Counsel asserts that because the applicant has only two convictions for shoplifting, with neither carrying a jail sentence of more than one year, these convictions qualify for the petty offense exception and do not render the applicant inadmissible. In a supplemental memorandum, counsel states that the [REDACTED] amended the applicant's complaint in her 1996 conviction from shoplifting-second offense to shoplifting-first offense and then vacated the previous sentence of six months probation, entering a new sentence of "guilty filed". Counsel asserts that this offense can no longer be considered a conviction under the definition of conviction in section 101(a)(48)(A)(ii) of the Act because a sentence of "guilty filed" does not impose a restraint on the applicant's liberty.

Section 212(a)(2)(A) of the Act states, in pertinent parts:

(i) [A]ny alien convicted of, or who admits having committed, or who admits committing acts which constitute the essential elements of—

(I) a crime involving moral turpitude (other than a purely political offense) or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such a crime . . . is inadmissible.

(ii) Exception.—Clause (i)(I) shall not apply to an alien who committed only one crime if-

(I) the crime was committed when the alien was under 18 years of age, and the crime was committed (and the alien was released from any confinement to a prison or correctional institution imposed for the crime) more than 5 years before the date of the application for a visa or other documentation and the date of application for admission to the United States, or

(II) the maximum penalty possible for the crime of which the alien was convicted (or which the alien admits having committed or of which the acts that the alien admits having committed constituted the essential elements) did not exceed imprisonment for one year and, if the alien was convicted of such crime, the alien was not sentenced to a term of imprisonment in excess of 6 months (regardless of the extent to which the sentence was ultimately executed).

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) held in Matter of Perez-Contreras, 20 I&N Dec. 615, 617-18 (BIA 1992), that:

[M]oral turpitude is a nebulous concept, which refers generally to conduct that shocks the public conscience as being inherently base, vile, or depraved, contrary to the rules of morality and the duties owed between man and man, either one's fellow man or society in general....

In determining whether a crime involves moral turpitude, we consider whether the act is accompanied by a vicious motive or corrupt mind. Where knowing or intentional conduct is an element of an offense, we have found moral turpitude to be present. However, where the required mens rea may not be determined from the statute, moral turpitude does not inhere.

(Citations omitted.)

In the recently decided Matter of Silva-Trevino, 24 I&N Dec. 687 (A.G. 2008), the Attorney General articulated a new methodology for determining whether a conviction is a crime involving moral turpitude where the language of the criminal statute in question encompasses conduct involving moral turpitude and conduct that does not. First, in evaluating whether an offense is one that categorically involves moral turpitude, an adjudicator reviews the criminal statute at issue to determine if there is a "realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility," that the statute would be applied to reach conduct that does not involve moral turpitude. Id. at 698 (citing Gonzalez v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183, 193 (2007)). A realistic probability exists where, at the time of the proceeding, an "actual (as opposed to hypothetical) case exists in which the relevant criminal statute was applied to conduct that did not involve moral turpitude. If the statute has not been so applied in any case (including the alien's own case), the adjudicator can reasonably conclude that all convictions under the statute may categorically be treated as ones involving moral turpitude." Id. at 697, 708 (citing Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 193).

However, if a case exists in which the criminal statute in question was applied to conduct that does not involve moral turpitude, "the adjudicator cannot categorically treat all convictions under that statute as convictions for crimes that involve moral turpitude." 24 I&N Dec. at 697 (citing Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 185-88, 193). An adjudicator then engages in a second-stage inquiry in which the adjudicator reviews the “record of conviction” to determine if the conviction was based on conduct involving moral turpitude. Id. at 698-699, 703-704, 708. The record of conviction consists of documents such as the indictment, the judgment of conviction, jury instructions, a signed guilty plea, and the plea transcript. Id. at 698, 704, 708.

If review of the record of conviction is inconclusive, an adjudicator then considers any additional evidence deemed necessary or appropriate to resolve accurately the moral turpitude question. 24 I&N Dec. at 699-704, 708-709. However, this “does not mean that the parties would be free to present any and all evidence bearing on an alien’s conduct leading to the conviction. (citation omitted). The sole purpose of the inquiry is to ascertain the nature of the prior conviction; it is not an invitation to relitigate the conviction itself.” Id. at 703.

The record indicates that on [REDACTED] the applicant was found guilty of shoplifting. No sentencing information was provided. On November 22, 1996 the applicant was found guilty of shoplifting by concealing merchandise under [REDACTED] and was sentenced to six month probation. On [REDACTED] the applicant admitted sufficient facts for a finding that she was guilty of shoplifting under Chapter 266 § 30A of the MGL and she was fined $100. On July 25, 1994, the applicant was charged with shoplifting but the charges were dismissed upon her paying court costs.

As stated above, counsel asserts that the applicant was only convicted of two shoplifting offenses as her 1995 guilty plea has been vacated pursuant to a motion to vacate guilty plea filed in 2008. In addition, in a supplemental memorandum counsel states that the [REDACTED] amended the applicant’s complaint in her 1996 conviction from shoplifting-second offense to shoplifting-first offense and then vacated the previous sentence of six months probation, entering a new sentence of “guilty filed”. Counsel asserts that this offense can no longer be considered a conviction under the definition of conviction in section 101(a)(48)(A)(ii) of the Act because a sentence of “guilty filed” does not impose a restraint on the applicant’s liberty.

In regards to the applicant’s 1996 conviction and amended complaint, section 101(a)(48) provides:

- (A) The term “conviction” means, with respect to an alien, a formal judgment of guilt of the alien entered by a court or, if adjudication of guilt has been withheld, where—
 - (i) a judge or jury has found the alien guilty or the alien has entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere or has admitted sufficient facts to warrant a finding of guilt, and
 - (ii) the judge has ordered some form of punishment, penalty, or restraint on the alien’s liberty to be imposed.

The AAO finds that the applicant has still been convicted of her 1996 offense in that adjudication of guilt was not withheld in that case, but the applicant was adjudged guilty of the offense, making her punishment irrelevant to a determination of whether she was or was not convicted for immigration purposes.

The AAO also finds that the current record indicates that the applicant is still convicted of her 1995 offense. Under the current statutory definition of "conviction" provided at section 101(a)(48)(A) of the Act, no effect is to be given in immigration proceedings to a state action which purports to expunge, dismiss, cancel, vacate, discharge, or otherwise remove a guilty plea or other record of guilt or conviction by operation of a state rehabilitative statute. Matter of Roldan, 22 I&N Dec. 512 (BIA 1999). Any subsequent, rehabilitative action that overturns a state conviction, other than on the merits or for a violation of constitutional or statutory rights in the underlying criminal proceedings, is ineffective to expunge a conviction for immigration purposes. Id. at 523, 528. In the applicant's case, counsel filed a motion in 2008 to vacate her 1995 guilty plea in accordance with Chapter 278 § 29D of the MGL.

Chapter 278 § 29D of the MGL states:

The court shall not accept a plea of guilty, a plea of nolo contendere, or an admission to sufficient facts from any defendant in any criminal proceeding unless the court advises such defendant of the following: "If you are not a citizen of the United States, you are hereby advised that the acceptance by this court of your plea of guilty, plea of nolo contendere, or admission to sufficient facts may have consequences of deportation, exclusion from admission to the United States, or denial of naturalization, pursuant to the laws of the United States." The court shall advise such defendant during every plea colloquy at which the defendant is proffering a plea of guilty, a plea of nolo contendere, or an admission to sufficient facts. The defendant shall not be required at the time of the plea to disclose to the court his legal status in the United States.

If the court fails so to advise the defendant, and he later at any time shows that his plea and conviction may have or has had one of the enumerated consequences, even if the defendant has already been deported from the United States, the court, on the defendant's motion, shall vacate the judgment, and permit the defendant to withdraw the plea of guilty, plea of nolo contendere, or admission of sufficient facts, and enter a plea of not guilty. Absent an official record or a contemporaneously written record kept in the court file that the court provided the advisement as prescribed in this section, including but not limited to a docket sheet that accurately reflects that the warning was given as required by this section, the defendant shall be presumed not to have received advisement. An advisement previously or subsequently provided the defendant during another plea colloquy shall not satisfy the advisement required by this section, nor shall it be used to presume the defendant understood the plea of guilty, or admission to sufficient facts he seeks to vacate would have the consequence of deportation, exclusion from admission to the United States, or denial of naturalization.

The AAO finds that the record shows that a motion to vacate the applicant's 1995 guilty plea was filed, allowed by the court, and then the proceedings were continued until another date. The AAO acknowledges that a plea vacated under [REDACTED] would have been vacated as a result of a procedural defect in the criminal proceedings and would no longer be a conviction for immigration purposes. However, the current record does not indicate that the applicant's motion was ever granted. Without a final order from the court showing that the applicant's motion to vacate her 1995 guilty plea under [REDACTED] was granted, the AAO cannot find that the applicant is no longer convicted for immigration purposes. Therefore, the applicant has been convicted of three counts of shoplifting.

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) has determined that to constitute a crime involving moral turpitude, a theft offense must require the intent to permanently take another person's property. See Matter of Grazley, 14 I&N Dec. 330 (BIA 1973) ("Ordinarily, a conviction for theft is considered to involve moral turpitude only when a permanent taking is intended."). In Matter of Jurado, 24 I&N Dec. 29, 33-34 (BIA 2006), the BIA found that violation of a Pennsylvania retail theft statute involved moral turpitude because the nature of retail theft is such that it is reasonable to assume such an offense would be committed with the intention of retaining merchandise permanently. The reasoning in Jurado is applicable to the present case as the applicant was convicted of shoplifting. She was thus convicted of knowingly taking goods of another with the intent to permanently deprive that person of such goods, a crime involving moral turpitude, and is inadmissible under section 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) of the Act. Therefore, the AAO finds that the applicant's convictions for shoplifting constitute crimes involving moral turpitude.

Furthermore, the AAO finds that the director and counsel have incorrectly interpreted the petty offense exception under section 212(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II) of the Act. The petty offense exception applies when an applicant has been convicted of only one crime involving moral turpitude. The applicant has been convicted of three crimes involving moral turpitude, so it is irrelevant to her inadmissibility if any of these convictions would separately meet the conditions for a petty offense exception. As an applicant who has been convicted of three crimes involving moral turpitude, she cannot qualify for the petty offense exception.

Section 212(h) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

The Attorney General [now, Secretary, Homeland Security, "Secretary"] may, in his discretion, waive the application of subparagraphs (A)(i)(I) . . . of subsection (a)(2) . . . if

- (1) (A) . . . it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that –
 - (i) . . . the activities for which the alien is inadmissible occurred more than 15 years before the date of the alien's application for a visa, admission, or adjustment of status,

(ii) the admission to the United States of such alien would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security of the United States, and

(iii) the alien has been rehabilitated; or

(B) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, parent, son, or daughter of a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the alien's denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to the United States citizen or lawfully resident spouse, parent, son, or daughter of such alien . . .

The record indicates that the applicant is statutorily ineligible for a waiver pursuant to section 212(h)(1)(A) of the Act because of her March 6, 2000 conviction. She is, however, eligible to apply for a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(h)(1)(B) of the Act.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(h)(1)(B) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse, parent, son or daughter of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's spouse and daughter are the only qualifying relatives in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Moralez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The record of hardship includes a letter from the applicant’s daughter and an affidavit from the applicant’s spouse, dated 2004. In her statement, the applicant’s daughter states that she would suffer great hardship if the applicant were removed from the United States and that the applicant is a diabetic and needs to see a doctor regularly. In his affidavit, the applicant’s spouse states that he is concerned that if his wife is removed from the United States, they will suffer economically because he would then have to support two households, one in the United States and one in Dominica. He also states that forced separation would be unbearable and have a great emotional toll on his family.

The AAO finds that the current record does not include the detail and documentation required for a finding of extreme hardship. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)). Without documentary evidence to support the claim, the assertions of counsel will not satisfy the petitioner's burden of proof. The unsupported assertions of counsel do not constitute evidence. Matter of Obaigbena, 19 I&N Dec. 533, 534 (BIA 1988); Matter of Laureano, 19 I&N Dec. 1 (BIA 1983); Matter of Ramirez-Sanchez, 17 I&N Dec. 503, 506 (BIA 1980). In making a finding of extreme hardship the AAO looks to detailed statements provided by the applicant and her family members as well as documentation to support the assertions of hardship made in any statements that are submitted.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant's spouse and/or daughter caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether she merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
