

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration
Services

(b)(6)

DATE: MAR 31 2015

Office: HIALEAH, FL

FILE:

IN RE:

APPLICATION: Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility pursuant to Section 212(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h)

ON BEHALF OF APPLICANT:

INSTRUCTIONS:

Enclosed please find the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) in your case.

This is a non-precedent decision. The AAO does not announce new constructions of law nor establish agency policy through non-precedent decisions. If you believe the AAO incorrectly applied current law or policy to your case or if you seek to present new facts for consideration, you may file a motion to reconsider or a motion to reopen, respectively. Any motion must be filed on a Notice of Appeal or Motion (Form I-290B) within 33 days of the date of this decision. Please review the Form I-290B instructions at <http://www.uscis.gov/forms> for the latest information on fee, filing location, and other requirements. See also 8 C.F.R. § 103.5. Do not file a motion directly with the AAO.

Thank you,

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "Ron Rosenberg".

Ron Rosenberg
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Hialeah, Florida. An appeal of the denial was dismissed by the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO). The matter was before the AAO on motion and the appeal was dismissed. The matter is now again before the AAO on motion. The motion will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Jamaica who was found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I), for having been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude. He seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(h) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h), in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse and step-children.

In a decision, dated October 3, 2012, the field office director found that the applicant failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601) accordingly. The field office director also found that the applicant had failed to show that he merited a waiver in the exercise of discretion.

On appeal, counsel contended that the field office erred in finding that the applicant's spouse would not experience extreme hardship if the waiver application were denied. Counsel also alleged that the applicant's conviction occurred over 15 years ago and that he therefore qualifies for a waiver based on rehabilitation.

In a motion, filed on July 15, 2013 and received by the AAO on May 14, 2014, counsel asserted that the applicant had been rehabilitated, that he warranted a favorable exercise of discretion, and that his criminal conviction was not for a violent or dangerous crime. Counsel asked for the applicant's case to be remanded so that the field office could present an argument that the applicant's conviction was for a violent or dangerous crime while then affording the applicant an opportunity to address the matter.

In the current motion, dated December 3, 2014, counsel asserts that we incorrectly applied the exceptional and extremely unusual hardship standard in assessing whether extraordinary circumstances existed in the applicant's case. He states specifically that we incorrectly applied the law based on the evidence in the record and we mischaracterized the facts in the record. He asserts that the applicant warrants a favorable exercise of discretion. No additional documentation was submitted.

A motion to reopen must state the new facts to be proved in the reopened proceeding and be supported by affidavits or other documentary evidence. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(2). A motion to reconsider must state the reasons for reconsideration and be supported by any pertinent precedent decisions to establish that the decision was based on an incorrect application of law or Service policy. A motion to reconsider a decision on an application or petition must, when filed, also establish that the decision was incorrect based on the evidence of record at the time of the initial decision. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(3). A motion that does not meet applicable requirements shall be dismissed. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(4).

The applicant's motion does not meet the requirements under 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(3) as the motion does not establish that the decision was incorrect based on the evidence of record at the time of the initial decision.

Section 212(a)(2) of the Act states in pertinent part:

Criminal and related grounds. —

(A) Conviction of certain crimes. —

- (i) In general. — Except as provided in clause (ii), any alien convicted of, or who admits having committed, or who admits committing acts which constitute the essential elements of —
  - (I) a crime involving moral turpitude (other than a purely political offense) or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such a crime . . . is inadmissible.

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) held in Matter of Perez-Contreras, 20 I&N Dec. 615, 617-18 (BIA 1992), that:

[M]oral turpitude is a nebulous concept, which refers generally to conduct that shocks the public conscience as being inherently base, vile, or depraved, contrary to the rules of morality and the duties owed between man and man, either one's fellow man or society in general . . . .

In determining whether a crime involves moral turpitude, we consider whether the act is accompanied by a vicious motive or corrupt mind. Where knowing or intentional conduct is an element of an offense, we have found moral turpitude to be present. However, where the required mens rea may not be determined from the statute, moral turpitude does not inhere.

(Citations omitted.)

The applicant's case arises within the jurisdiction of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, which has reaffirmed the traditional categorical approach for determining whether a crime involves moral turpitude, declining to follow the framework set forth by the Attorney General in Matter of Silva-Trevino, 24 I&N Dec. 24 I&N Dec. 687 (A.G. 2008). See Fajardo v. Attorney General, 659 F.3d 1301, 1310 (11th Cir. 2011). The Eleventh Circuit defines the categorical approach as "looking only to the statutory definitions of the prior offenses, and not to the particular facts underlying those convictions." 659 F.3d at 1305 (quoting Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 600 (1990)). Where the statutory definition of a crime includes "conduct that would categorically be grounds for removal as well as conduct that would not, then the record of conviction — i.e., the charging document, plea, verdict, and sentence — may also be considered.” 659 F.3d at 1305 (citing Jaggernaut v. U.S. Att’y Gen., 432 F.3d 1346, 1354-55 (11th Cir. 2005)).

The record reflects that on [REDACTED] 1993, the applicant was arrested in Florida and charged under Fla. Stat. Ann. § 800.4 for, “Lewd, lascivious, or indecent assault or act upon or in presence of child.” The applicant entered a plea of nolo contendere and on [REDACTED] 1993, the court withheld adjudication and placed the applicant on probation for two years. Because the applicant entered a plea of nolo contendere and the judge placed him on probation, he was convicted for immigration purposes. See Section 101(a)(48)(A) of the Act. We previously found that the applicant was inadmissible under section 212(a)(2)(A) of the Act as a result of this conviction.

The Attorney General [Secretary of Homeland Security] may, in his discretion, waive the application of subparagraph (A)(i)(I) . . . of subsection (a)(2) . . . if -

(1) (A) in the case of any immigrant it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that --

(i) . . . the activities for which the alien is inadmissible occurred more than 15 years before the date of the alien's application for a visa, admission, or adjustment of status,

(ii) the admission to the United States of such alien would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security of the United States, and

(iii) the alien has been rehabilitated; or

(B) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, parent, son, or daughter of a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the alien's denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to the United States citizen or lawfully resident spouse, parent, son, or daughter of such alien . . . ; and

(2) the Attorney General [Secretary], in his discretion, and pursuant to such terms, conditions and procedures as he may by regulations prescribe, has consented to the alien's applying or reapplying for a visa, for admission to the United States, or adjustment of status.

We previously found on motion that the applicant met the requirements for a waiver under section 212(h)(1)(A)(i) of the Act. The record indicated that the applicant's criminal conduct occurred over 20 years ago and he had been involved in no other criminal conduct. The record included four reference letters stating that the applicant is a valued and trustworthy member of the community. The record also included a statement from the applicant's spouse indicating the role the applicant plays in her family as father to her four children and as her financial and emotional support. Thus, we asserted that the record established that the applicant had demonstrated eligibility for a waiver based on rehabilitation under section 212(h)(1)(A) of the Act.

However, we then stated that even if the applicant were able to satisfy the requirements of section 212(h)(1)(A) of the Act, his waiver application would not be granted as the record failed to show that he is deserving of a favorable exercise of the Secretary's discretion as he has been convicted of a violent or dangerous crime and is subject to section 212.7(d) of the Act.

For waivers of inadmissibility, the burden is on the applicant to establish that a grant of a waiver of inadmissibility is warranted in the exercise of discretion. Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 299 (BIA 1996). The adverse factors evidencing an alien's undesirability as a permanent resident must be balanced with the social and humane considerations presented on his behalf to determine whether the grant of relief in the exercise of discretion appears to be in the best interests of this country. Id. at 300.

The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(d) provides:

The Attorney General [Secretary, Department of Homeland Security], in general, will not favorably exercise discretion under section 212(h)(2) of the Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(h)(2)) to consent to an application or reapplication for a visa, or admission to the United States, or adjustment of status, with respect to immigrant aliens who are inadmissible under section 212(a)(2) of the Act in cases involving violent or dangerous crimes, except in extraordinary circumstances, such as those involving national security or foreign policy considerations, or cases in which an alien clearly demonstrates that the denial of the application for adjustment of status or an immigrant visa or admission as an immigrant would result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. Moreover, depending on the gravity of the alien's underlying criminal offense, a showing of extraordinary circumstances might still be insufficient to warrant a favorable exercise of discretion under section 212(h)(2) of the Act.

The Complaint/Arrest Affidavit in the applicant's case indicates that the applicant committed sexual battery on a 10 year old child. Committing sexual battery on a child is a dangerous crime. Physical force may not always be evident in the commission of the crime only because the victim would be unable and/or unwilling to resist given his or her age. However, a crime of this nature results in untold physical and emotional harm to the victim. Therefore, we find that the applicant is subject to 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(d) for being convicted of a dangerous crime. Counsel does not contest this finding on motion.

Accordingly, the applicant must show that "extraordinary circumstances" warrant approval of the waiver. 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(d). Extraordinary circumstances may exist in cases involving national security or foreign policy considerations, or if the denial of the applicant's admission would result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. Id. Finding no evidence of foreign policy, national security, or other extraordinary equities, the AAO will consider whether the applicant has “clearly demonstrate[d] that the denial of . . . admission as an immigrant would result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship” to a qualifying relative. Id.

In Matter of Monreal-Aguinaga, 23 I& N Dec. 56, 62 (BIA 2001), the BIA determined that exceptional and extremely unusual hardship in cancellation of removal cases under section 240A(b) of the Act is hardship that “must be ‘substantially’ beyond the ordinary hardship that would be expected when a close family member leaves this country.” However, the applicant need not show that hardship would be unconscionable. Id. at 61

The BIA stated that in assessing exceptional and extremely unusual hardship, it would be useful to view the factors considered in determining extreme hardship. Id. at 63. In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565-66 (BIA 1999), the BIA provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established the lower standard of extreme hardship. The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative’s family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative’s ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. The BIA added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not an exclusive list. Id.

In Monreal-Aguinaga, the BIA provided additional examples of the hardship factors it deemed relevant for establishing exceptional and extremely unusual hardship:

[T]he ages, health, and circumstances of qualifying lawful permanent resident and United States citizen relatives. For example, an applicant who has elderly parents in this country who are solely dependent upon him for support might well have a strong case. Another strong applicant might have a qualifying child with very serious health issues, or compelling special needs in school. A lower standard of living or adverse country conditions in the country of return are factors to consider only insofar as they may affect a qualifying relative, but generally will be insufficient in themselves to support a finding of exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. As with extreme hardship, all hardship factors should be considered in the aggregate when assessing exceptional and extremely unusual hardship.

23 I&N Dec. at 63-4.

In the precedent decision issued the following year, Matter of Andazola-Rivas, the BIA noted that, “the relative level of hardship a person might suffer cannot be considered entirely in a vacuum. It must necessarily be assessed, at least in part, by comparing it to the hardship others might face.” 23 I&N Dec. 319, 323 (BIA 2002). The issue presented in Andazola-Rivas was whether the Immigration Judge correctly applied the exceptional and extremely unusual hardship standard in a cancellation of removal case when he concluded that such hardship to the respondent's minor children was demonstrated by evidence that they "would suffer hardship of an emotional, academic and financial nature," and would "face complete upheaval in their lives and hardship that could conceivably ruin their lives." Id. at 321 (internal quotations omitted). The BIA viewed the evidence of hardship in the respondent's case and determined that the hardship presented by the respondent did not rise to the level of exceptional and extremely unusual. The BIA noted:

While almost every case will present some particular hardship, the fact pattern presented here is, in fact, a common one, and the hardships the respondent has outlined are simply not substantially different from those that would normally be expected upon removal to a less developed country. Although the hardships presented here might have been adequate to meet the former "extreme hardship" standard for suspension of deportation, we find that they are not the types of hardship envisioned by Congress when it enacted the significantly higher "exceptional and extremely unusual hardship" standard.

23 I&N Dec. at 324.

However, the BIA in Matter of Gonzalez Recinas, a precedent decision issued the same year as Andazola-Rivas, clarified that "the hardship standard is not so restrictive that only a handful of applicants, such as those who have a qualifying relative with a serious medical condition, will qualify for relief." 23 I&N Dec. 467, 470 (BIA 2002). The BIA found that the hardship factors presented by the respondent cumulatively amounted to exceptional and extremely unusual hardship to her qualifying relatives. The BIA noted that these factors included her heavy financial and familial burden, lack of support from her children's father, her U.S. citizen children's unfamiliarity with the Spanish language, lawful residence of her immediate family, and the concomitant lack of family in Mexico. 23 I&N Dec. at 472. The BIA stated, "We consider this case to be on the outer limit of the narrow spectrum of cases in which the exceptional and extremely unusual hardship standard will be met." Id. at 470.

An analysis under Monreal-Aguinaga and Andazola-Rivas is appropriate. See Gonzalez Recinas, at 469 ("While any hardship case ultimately succeeds or fails on its own merits and on the particular facts presented, Matter of Andazola and Matter of Monreal are the starting points for any analysis of exceptional and extremely unusual hardship.").

We find that although the record indicates that the applicant has established, pursuant to section 212(h)(1)(A) of the Act, that his admission to the United States would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security of the United States, and that he has been rehabilitated, the current record does not show that he warrants a favorable exercise of discretion under the heightened discretionary standard of 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(d).

The record of hardship includes: statements from the applicant and his qualifying spouse; a psychological evaluation of the qualifying spouse; financial documentation; and country conditions information.

In a Notice of Intent to Dismiss (NOID), dated September 18, 2014, we stated that in regards to the exercise of discretion, the applicant asserted that his spouse will suffer emotional and financial hardship as a result of his inadmissibility. We asserted that the record did not support a finding that the applicant would suffer exceptional and extremely unusual hardship as a result of the applicant's inadmissibility. The record did indicate that the applicant's spouse has a troubled past including: suffering from depression, drug use, and being in abusive relationships. The record indicated that at the age of 25 years old the applicant's spouse attempted suicide and in 2007, after her husband lost his job and her youngest son went to jail, she had suicide ideations. We sympathized with the difficulties faced by the applicant's spouse's past, but stated that the record did not support a finding that the applicant's presence would relieve these hardships. The record did not indicate that separation would be the cause of the applicant's spouse suffering exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. The record also failed to indicate that relocation to Jamaica would cause the applicant's spouse exceptional or extremely unusual hardship. The record included country conditions information stating that violent crime is a problem in Jamaica, but the record did not reflect how individuals in the applicant and his spouse's positions would adjust to relocation. Finally, we indicated that all of the hardship evidence in the record was submitted in 2012 with documents being dated 4 to 6 years ago.

In the response to our NOID, counsel submitted a brief, but no additional hardship evidence. He stated that the applicant's spouse's mental state and the likelihood that she would commit suicide as a result of separation from the applicant, as evidence by the psychological report in the record, established that the applicant's spouse would suffer exceptionally and extremely unusual hardship. Counsel stated that the fact that the applicant's spouse has not seen a mental health practitioner does not mean that she is not severely mentally ill and in danger of imminent suicide if her husband is removed. A psychological evaluation, dated October 1, 2008, indicated that the applicant's spouse has suffered from mental health issues in the past. The evaluation indicated that she suffered from these issues before she met the applicant and after she and the applicant were together. Other than the evaluation from 2008, the record does not include any other independent, objective evidence regarding the applicant's spouse's mental health and her ability to cope with separation. The applicant's spouse's statement, dated February 9, 2010, largely stated that she will suffer from not having the financial support of the applicant. She also stated that the applicant pays for her medical bills, prescriptions, and that he makes sure she is not stressed or depressed. Although this statement indicated that the applicant's spouse would suffer emotional hardship as a result of being separated from the applicant, it does not establish that she would suffer hardship rising to the level of exceptional or extremely unusual hardship. The record did not support the assertions made by counsel that upon separation the applicant's spouse would be likely to commit suicide. Furthermore, we stated that the probative value of the psychological evaluation in the record is diminished given that it was completed in 2008 and there has been no other documentation submitted indicating that the applicant's spouse was suffering such severe mental health problems. Finally, we stated that counsel's brief also failed to establish that the applicant's spouse would suffer exceptional and extremely unusual hardship as a result of relocation to Jamaica.

On motion, counsel asserts that the applicant's case should be reconsidered because we failed to properly consider the applicant's spouse's mental health history, her current mental health status, and the potential effects the applicant's removal would have on her wellbeing. He states that the probative value of the psychological report should not be diminished because it was conducted in 2008. He states that the record does not include a more recent psychological evaluation because the applicant's spouse's mental illness is not recent, but has been ongoing for many years. Counsel states further that the applicant's spouse's statement, in asserting that the applicant is largely a financial help to her and failing to indicate that he is an emotional help, should not be used as evidence that she would not suffer extremely unusual hardship as a result of his removal, because she is a "severely disturbed individual." Counsel also adds that the record establishes that the applicant's spouse has a long standing substance abuse problem, an anemic condition, and gastro esophageal reflux.

We do not find counsel's assertions to be persuasive. We agree that the record is clear that the applicant's spouse has a history of severe, mental health problems. However, the record does not indicate, with symptoms as severe as what is stated in the 2008 report, why she has failed to seek treatment for her conditions since 2008. The record also fails to establish that with other family ties in the United States, the applicant's spouse's connection to her husband is such that she would suffer exceptional and extremely unusual hardship, beyond what she suffers already from her medical conditions, including her mental health problems. There is no doubt that the applicant's spouse would suffer hardship as a result of separation from the applicant, but the record does not show that this hardship would rise to the level of exceptional and extremely unusual hardship.

In regards to the applicant's spouse's ties to the United States and the hardship she would suffer upon relocation, counsel asserts that the applicant's spouse's children were all born in the United States and the applicant's spouse has lived her entire life in the United States. Counsel states that the lack of proper medical care in Jamaica and the separation from her family in the United States would cause the applicant's spouse exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. Similar to what was stated above, we would also agree that the applicant's spouse would suffer hardship as a result of relocation to Jamaica given her mental health problems and familial ties to the United States, but the record does not show that this hardship rises to the level of exceptional and extremely unusual.

In addition, counsel continually reiterates that the applicant's spouse's most recent suicidal ideation was triggered by a potential 10 month separation from her son, therefore, any separation from a family member would cause exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. This is a simplification of what is written in the psychological report which states that the applicant's spouse's most recent suicidal ideation was triggered by her husband losing his job and her younger son going to jail.

Furthermore, counsel's assertions regarding the similarities this case has to the hardships presented in In Re Gonzales Recinas, 23 I&N Dec. 467, 2002 (BIA 2002) are unfounded. The applicant in In Re Gonzales Recinas was a single mother, who provided the only familial and financial support to four minor U.S. citizen children, ranging in age from 11 to five years old. We sympathize with the applicant's spouse's hardships, but the record has not shown that the applicant is the sole possible source of financial support for his spouse and the applicant's spouse's children are all adults ranging in age from 23 to 33 years old. We also find counsel's assertions regarding Matter of Buscemi, 19 I&N Dec. 628 (BIA 1988) unfounded as we have considered all factors present in the case to accurately evaluate the hardship standard. Therefore, we find that the current documentation in the record fails to indicate that the applicant's spouse would suffer exceptional or extremely unusual hardship as a result of his inadmissibility.

Finally, in accordance with 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(d), we find that given the gravity of the applicant's underlying criminal offense, a showing of extraordinary circumstances would be insufficient to warrant a favorable exercise of discretion under section 212(h)(2) of the Act. Thus, the applicant has failed to establish that he warrants a favorable exercise of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(h) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the motion is dismissed.

ORDER: The motion is dismissed.