DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Acting District Director, Atlanta, Georgia, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be sustained.

The record reflects that the applicant is a native and citizen of Nigeria who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i), for procuring admission to the United States through fraud or the willful misrepresentation of a material fact. The applicant is married to a United States citizen and the beneficiary of an approved Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i), in order to reside in the United States with his United States citizen spouse.

The Acting District Director found that the applicant had failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on the applicant's qualifying relative and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601) accordingly. Decision of the Acting District Director, dated August 3, 2007.

On appeal, the applicant, through counsel, asserts that the Acting District Director erred in denying the applicant's waiver application. Form I-290B, filed September 4, 2007. Counsel claims that the applicant's United States citizen wife would experience extreme hardship. Id.

The record includes, but is not limited to, counsel's appeal brief; an affidavit from the applicant's wife; medical documents for the applicant's wife; tax documents, utility bills, a lease agreement, and insurance documents; an article on healthcare in Nigeria; a travel warning and country profile on Nigeria; and a 2006 U.S. Department of State country conditions report on Nigeria. The entire record was reviewed and considered in arriving at a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

- (i) In general.-Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.
- (iii) Waiver authorized.-For provision authorizing waiver of clause (i), see subsection (i).

Section 212 of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

- (i) (1) The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security, "Secretary"] may, in the discretion of the [Secretary], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, son, or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien...

In the present case, the record reflects that the applicant entered the United States in June 2000 by presenting a Nigerian passport in another individual's name. See Record of Sworn Statement, dated February 15, 2006. In addition, the applicant answered to "no" to question 10 on his Application to Register Permanent Resident or Adjust Status (Form I-485). Based on the applicant's use of another individual's Nigerian passport to procure admission to the United States and for answering "no" to question 10 on his Application to Register Permanent Resident or Adjust Status (Form I-485) in an attempt to procure admission (adjustment of status) to the United States, the AAO finds that the applicant is inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act. The AAO notes that counsel does not dispute this finding.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's wife is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and the USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

As a qualifying relative is not required to depart the United States as a consequence of an applicant's inadmissibility, two distinct factual scenarios exist should a waiver application be denied: either the qualifying relative will join the applicant to reside abroad or the qualifying relative will remain in the United States. Ascertaining the actual course of action that will be taken is complicated by the fact that an applicant may easily assert a plan for the qualifying relative to relocate abroad or to remain in the United States depending on which scenario presents the greatest prospective hardship, even though no intention exists to carry out the alleged plan in reality. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 885 (BIA 1994) (addressing separation of minor child from both parents applying for suspension of deportation). Thus, we interpret the statutory language of the various waiver provisions in section 212 of the Act to require an applicant to establish extreme hardship to his or her qualifying relative(s) under both possible scenarios. To endure the hardship of separation when extreme hardship could be avoided by joining the applicant abroad, or to endure the hardship of relocation when extreme hardship could be avoided by remaining in the United States, is a matter of choice and not the result of removal or inadmissibility. As the Board of Immigration Appeals (Board) stated in Matter of Ige:

[W]e consider the critical issue . . . to be whether a child would suffer extreme hardship if he accompanied his parent abroad. If, as in this case, no hardship would ensue, then the fact that the child might face hardship if left in the United States would be the result of parental choice, not the parent's deportation.

Id. See also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is “not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning,” but “necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case.” Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative’s family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative’s ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of deportation, removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one’s present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. at 631-32; Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 883; Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm’r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

We observe that the actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., In re Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate).

Family separation, for instance, has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal in some cases. See Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. at 813. Nevertheless, family ties are to be considered in analyzing hardship. See Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 565-66. The question of whether family separation is the ordinary result of inadmissibility or removal may depend on the nature of family relationship considered. For example, in Matter of Shaughnessy, the Board considered the scenario of parents being separated from their soon-to-be adult son, finding that this separation would not result in extreme hardship to the parents. Id. at 811-12; see also U.S. v. Arrieta, 224 F.3d 1076, 1082 (9th Cir. 2000) (“Mr. Arrieta was not a spouse, but a son and brother. It was evident from the record that the effect of the deportation order would be separation rather than relocation.”). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board considered the scenario of the respondent’s spouse accompanying him to Mexico, finding that she would not experience extreme hardship from losing “physical proximity to her family” in the United States. 22 I&N Dec. at 566-67.

The decision in Cervantes-Gonzalez reflects the norm that spouses reside with one another and establish a life together such that separating from one another is likely to result in substantial hardship. It is common for both spouses to relocate abroad if one of them is not allowed to stay in the United States, which typically results in separation from other family members living in the United States. Other decisions reflect the expectation that minor children will remain with their parents, upon whom they usually depend for financial and emotional support. See, e.g., Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 886 (“[I]t is generally preferable for children to be brought up by their parents.”). Therefore, the most important single hardship factor may be separation, particularly where spouses and minor children are concerned. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); Cerrillo-Perez, 809 F.2d at 1422.

Regardless of the type of family relationship involved, the hardship resulting from family separation is determined based on the actual impact of separation on an applicant, and all hardships must be considered in determining whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond the consequences ordinarily associated with removal or inadmissibility. Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. at 383. Nevertheless, though we require an applicant to show that a qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship both in the event of relocation and in the event of separation, in analyzing the latter scenario, we give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship of separation itself, particularly in cases involving the separation of spouses from one another and/or minor children from a parent. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293.

The first prong of the analysis addresses hardship to the applicant’s wife if she relocates to Nigeria. In counsel’s appeal brief dated October 4, 2007, counsel claims that “Nigeria’s culture, customs, food, folklore and society are alien to [the applicant’s wife] with her only tie to Nigeria is that [the applicant] was born there.” Additionally, counsel states if the applicant’s wife joins the applicant in Nigeria, she “would certainly be exposed to Nigeria’s state of political unrest.” The AAO notes that on June 15, 2010, the U.S. Department of State issued a travel warning to United States citizens which warns “of the risks of travel to Nigeria and recommend[s] U.S. citizens to avoid all but essential travel to the [redacted] states of [redacted] the Southeastern states of [redacted] and [redacted], and the city of [redacted] because of the risks of kidnapping, robbery, and other armed attacks in these areas.” The travel warning also states “[v]iolent crime committed by individuals and gangs, as well as by persons wearing police and military uniforms, is a problem throughout the country.” The AAO notes the safety issues in Nigeria.

In an affidavit dated October 3, 2007, the applicant's wife states she suffers from "an irregular thyroid condition that requires constant medical treatment." The AAO notes that the record establishes that on April 3, 2006, the applicant's wife had a thyroid lobectomy, which showed benign follicular adenoma. The applicant's wife states she "would not be able to monitor [her] condition and receive the necessary medical treatments if [she] travel[s] with [the applicant] to Nigeria." Counsel states that "[t]he healthcare system of Nigeria is atrocious." The AAO notes that counsel submitted an article, Poor healthcare system: Nigeria's moral indifference, dated July 14, 2005, which states "[a]ccess to quality healthcare is either limited in Nigeria or nonexistent with staggering financial burden to families and the nation." The AAO acknowledges the problems faced by the [REDACTED]. However, the AAO notes that other than the operative report, there is no medical documentation in the record establishing that the applicant's wife continues to suffer from any medical conditions or requires constant medical treatment. Going on record without supporting documentation is not sufficient to meet the applicant's burden of proof in this proceeding. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

Counsel states "[c]onsidering the current financial situation [the applicant's wife] is experiencing, there is every indication that it will worse [sic] to relocate to Nigeria with [the applicant]." The AAO notes that in an affidavit dated August 28, 2004, the applicant's wife indicated that she was pursuing a nursing degree. Counsel states all of the applicant's wife's immediate relatives are United States citizens. He states the applicant's wife "speaks with her mother on a daily basis.... In fact [the applicant's wife] has had to depend on her mother to care for her through the various illnesses that she has encountered during the past few years."

Based on the travel warning issued to United States citizens, the financial situation in Nigeria, the applicant's wife's unfamiliarity with the Nigerian culture, her lack of ties to Nigeria, her medical issues, and the emotional hardship of being separated from her mother, the AAO finds that the applicant's wife would suffer extreme hardship if she were to relocate to Nigeria to be with the applicant.

In regard to the applicant's spouse remaining in the United States, counsel states that the separation "will have an extremely negative psychological impact on her mental and physical health" and she "will experience depression and anxiety." He states the applicant's wife depends on the applicant's "medical insurance through his position of employment." The applicant's wife states she is "constantly tired" and she "lack[s] the energy to work." The AAO notes that evidence in the record establishes that the applicant's wife had surgery on her right thyroid on April 3, 2006. The AAO notes that the record establishes that the applicant's wife's health insurance is provided by the applicant's employer. Counsel states that due to the applicant's wife's illness "it has been extremely difficult for her to work." The applicant's wife states she is "completely dependent upon [the applicant] to provide for [her] financially as well as providing medical insurance. [She] [would] not be able to support [herself] if [she] were to choose [sic] to stay here in the United States." In a February 6, 2006 statement, the applicant's employer states that the applicant is paid $11.25 per hour, he works 48-52 hours per week, and he works a minimum of 8 hours of overtime at one and one-half times his hourly rate. The applicant and his wife's 2004 joint federal tax return reflects an income of $20,831. The record includes some documentation of the applicant's and his wife's income and expenses, including a lease agreement, electric bills, and phone bills. Considering the medical and financial issues and the normal results of a permanent separation, AAO finds that the applicant's wife would experience extreme hardship if she remained in the United States.

The AAO additionally finds that the applicant merits a waiver of inadmissibility as a matter of discretion. In discretionary matters, the alien bears the burden of proving eligibility in terms of equities in the United States which are not outweighed by adverse factors. See Matter of T-S-Y-, 7 I&N Dec. 582 (BIA 1957).

The adverse factors in the present case are the applicant's misrepresentation and his unauthorized period of stay. The favorable and mitigating factors are his United States citizen spouse, the extreme hardship to his spouse if he were refused admission, and his supportive relationship with his spouse as documented in the record.

The AAO finds that, although the immigration violations committed by the applicant are serious and cannot be condoned, when taken together, the favorable factors in the present case outweigh the adverse factors, such that a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be sustained.

ORDER: The appeal is sustained.
