DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Detroit, Michigan. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be sustained and the waiver application will be approved.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Lebanon, who was found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i), for concealing his prior unauthorized employment when he obtained lawful permanent resident status in 1978. The applicant is the beneficiary of an approved Immigrant Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i), in order to remain in the United States with his wife and children.

In a decision dated August 27, 2010, the Field Office Director found that the applicant failed to establish that his qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship as a consequence of his inadmissibility. The application was denied accordingly. See Decision of the Field Office Director dated August 27, 2010.

On appeal, the applicant's attorney submitted evidence to supplement the applicant's waiver application, including an updated letter from the qualifying relative. In the qualifying relative's letter, she asserts that she will experience medical, physical, financial, emotional and psychological hardships if she is separated from her husband. Moreover, she also indicates that all her children live in the United States and that she cannot work due to her medical conditions. In another letter from the qualifying spouse, she contends that she would face safety and economic concerns should she relocate to Lebanon.

The record contains an Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601); a Notice of Appeal (Form I-290B); letters from the applicant, the qualifying spouse and their children; the applicant and qualifying spouse's marriage certificate; the qualifying relative's permanent resident card; birth certificates, school records and awards for the children; letters from the applicant's employers; tax returns and other financial documentation; certificates regarding the applicant's career training; documentation regarding the applicant's volunteer work; medical evidence regarding the qualifying spouse including documentation of her medical expenses and proof of insurance; documentation regarding one of the children's speech issues; and letters from a counseling center regarding the effect of deportation on the whole family.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

- (i) Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.

Section 212(i) of the Act provides that:

The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] may, in the discretion of the Attorney General [Secretary], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an alien who is the spouse, son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien or, in the case of an alien granted classification under clause (iii) or (iv) of section 204(a)(1)(A) or clause (ii) or (iii) of section 204(a)(1)(B), the alien demonstrates extreme hardship to the alien or the alien's United States citizen, lawful permanent resident, or qualified alien parent or child.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. The applicant's wife is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Moralez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

As a qualifying relative is not required to depart the United States as a consequence of an applicant's inadmissibility, two distinct factual scenarios exist should a waiver application be denied: either the qualifying relative will join the applicant to reside abroad or the qualifying relative will remain in the United States. Ascertaining the actual course of action that will be taken is complicated by the fact that an applicant may easily assert a plan for the qualifying relative to relocate abroad or to remain in the United States depending on which scenario presents the greatest prospective hardship, even though no intention exists to carry out the alleged plan in reality. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 885 (BIA 1994) (addressing separation of minor child from both parents applying for suspension of deportation). Thus, we interpret the statutory language of the various waiver provisions in section 212 of the Act to require an applicant to establish extreme hardship to his or her qualifying relative(s) under both possible scenarios. To endure the hardship of separation when extreme hardship could be avoided by joining the applicant abroad, or to endure the hardship of relocation when extreme hardship could be avoided by remaining in the United States, is a matter of choice and not the result of removal or inadmissibility. As the Board of Immigration Appeals stated in Matter of Ige:

[W]e consider the critical issue . . . to be whether a child would suffer extreme hardship if he accompanied his parent abroad. If, as in this case, no hardship would ensue, then the fact that the child might face hardship if left in the United States would be the result of parental choice, not the parent's deportation.

Id. See also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang,

10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of deportation, removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. at 631-32; Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 883; Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

We observe that the actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., In re Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate).

Family separation, for instance, has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal in some cases. See Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. at 813. Nevertheless, family ties are to be considered in analyzing hardship. See Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 565-66. The question of whether family separation is the ordinary result of inadmissibility or removal may depend on the nature of family relationship considered. For example, in Matter of Shaughnessy, the Board considered the scenario of parents being separated from their soon-to-be adult son, finding that this separation would not result in extreme hardship to the parents. Id. at 811-12; see also U.S. v. Arrieta, 224 F.3d 1076, 1082 (9th Cir. 2000) (“Mr. ██████ was not a spouse, but a son and brother. It was evident from the record that the effect of the deportation order would be separation rather than relocation.”). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board considered the scenario of the respondent’s spouse accompanying him to the Philippines, finding that she would not experience extreme hardship from losing “physical proximity to her family” in the United States. 22 I&N Dec. at 566-67.

The decision in Cervantes-Gonzalez reflects the norm that spouses reside with one another and establish a life together such that separating from one another is likely to result in substantial hardship. It is common for both spouses to relocate abroad if one of them is not allowed to stay in the United States, which typically results in separation from other family members living in the United States. Other decisions reflect the expectation that minor children will remain with their parents, upon whom they usually depend for financial and emotional support. See, e.g., Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 886 (“[I]t is generally preferable for children to be brought up by their parents.”). Therefore, the most important single hardship factor may be separation, particularly where spouses and minor children are concerned. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); Cerrillo-Perez, 809 F.2d at 1422.

Regardless of the type of family relationship involved, the hardship resulting from family separation is determined based on the actual impact of separation on an applicant, and all hardships must be considered in determining whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond the consequences ordinarily associated with removal or inadmissibility. Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. at 383. Nevertheless, though we require an applicant to show that a qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship both in the event of relocation and in the event of separation, in analyzing the latter scenario, we give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship of separation itself, particularly in cases involving the separation of spouses from one another and/or minor children from a parent. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293.

In the present case, the record reflects that the applicant concealed his prior unauthorized employment when he obtained lawful permanent resident status in 1978. This employment would have rendered the applicant ineligible for adjustment of status, and as a result of this material misrepresentation, his permanent resident status was later rescinded. The applicant is therefore inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act for obtaining an immigration benefit to the United States through fraud or misrepresentation.

The applicant’s qualifying relative is his wife, who is a lawful permanent resident. The documentation provided that specifically relates to the qualifying spouse’s hardship includes letters from the applicant, the qualifying spouse and their children; letters from the applicant’s employers; tax returns and other financial documentation; medical evidence regarding the qualifying spouse including documentation of her medical expenses and proof of insurance; and letters from a counseling center regarding the effect of deportation on the whole family. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

A waiver of the bar to admission under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative of the applicant. The AAO notes that extreme hardship to the applicant's spouse must be established in the event that she relocates to Lebanon and in the event that she remains in the United States, as she is not required to reside outside the United States based on the denial of the applicant's waiver request. The AAO will consider the relevant factors in adjudication of this case.

As previously stated, the qualifying relative asserts that she will experience medical, physical, financial, emotional and psychological hardships if she is separated from her husband. Moreover, she indicates that all her children live in the United States and that she cannot work due to her medical conditions. In addition, the qualifying spouse contends that she would face safety and economic concerns should she relocate to Lebanon.

The AAO finds that the applicant has established that his qualifying spouse will suffer extreme hardship as a consequence of being separated from him. The qualifying spouse asserts that she will suffer medical and physical hardships due to her separation from the applicant. The record contains letters from the qualifying spouse's doctors, medical records and insurance information. In particular, one of her doctors, who has been treating her for fifteen years, states that the qualifying spouse "requires daily assistance with all home chores" and that she is "disabled from a combination of spinal disc disease, chronic pain, shoulder rotator cuff injury, and Minier's disease." The doctors' letters also confirm that the qualifying spouse is unable to "engage in gainful employment" due to her medical issues. Moreover, the qualifying spouse's letter contends that she will encounter emotional and psychological hardships should her husband relocate to Lebanon. The record includes letters from the qualifying spouse, the applicant, and their children and letters from a counseling center. In the qualifying spouse's letter, she states that her "children and husband are [her] life" and that they are "the only family [she has] ever had in the past 29 years." The qualifying spouse also explained how difficult her life has been because of all her physical impediments and if her husband is not given a waiver it will be "catastrophic" for her. A letter from a clinical social worker at a counseling center also indicated that the qualifying spouse is currently being treated for anxiety and depression, and finds that the separation of the applicant from the qualifying spouse will cause "irreversible psychological damage." With regard to the qualifying spouse's financial hardships, the record contains financial documentation of the applicant and qualifying spouse's income and expenses, such as their mortgage and medical bills. The evidence demonstrates that the qualifying spouse will suffer financially without the income of the applicant, as the qualifying spouse is medically unable to work. The qualifying spouse also relies on the applicant's employment for his medical insurance. In light of the qualifying spouse's medical, physical, emotional, psychological and financial hardships, the record reflects that the hardships facing the qualifying spouse in the United States without the presence of the applicant rises to the level of extreme.

The applicant has also demonstrated that his qualifying spouse would suffer extreme hardship in the event that she relocated to Lebanon. The qualifying spouse has lived in the United States for over 25 years and all her children live in the United States. The record contains documents demonstrating that the qualifying spouse's children live in the United States, including school records and birth certificates. In addition, letters from the qualifying spouse and her children indicate that it would be difficult for the children to assimilate in Lebanon as they do not speak Arabic. The qualifying spouse also asserts that her parents, who had lived in Lebanon, have passed away. Moreover, the record contains detailed medical documentation indicating that the applicant's spouse suffers from serious medical issues causing her to be disabled and unable to work. The AAO concludes the qualifying spouse would experience extreme hardship if she relocated to Lebanon to accompany the applicant.

Considered in the aggregate, the applicant has established that his qualifying spouse would face extreme hardship if the applicant's waiver request is denied. Extreme hardship is a requirement for eligibility for a waiver, but once established it is but one favorable discretionary factor to be considered. Matter of Mendez-Moralez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996). For waivers of inadmissibility, the burden is on the applicant to establish that a grant of a waiver of inadmissibility is warranted in the exercise of discretion. Id. at 299. The adverse factors evidencing an alien's undesirability as a permanent resident must be balanced with the social and humane considerations presented on his behalf to determine whether the grant of relief in the exercise of discretion appears to be in the best interests of this country. Id. at 300.

In Matter of Mendez-Moralez, in evaluating whether section 212(h)(1)(B) relief is warranted in the exercise of discretion, the BIA stated that:

The factors adverse to the applicant include the nature and underlying circumstances of the exclusion ground at issue, the presence of additional significant violations of this country's immigration laws, the existence of a criminal record and, if so, its nature, recency and seriousness, and the presence of other evidence indicative of an alien's bad character or undesirability as a permanent resident of this country. . . . The favorable considerations include family ties in the United States, residence of long duration in this country (particularly where the alien began his residency at a young age), evidence of hardship to the alien and his family if he is excluded and deported, service in this country's Armed Forces, a history of stable employment, the existence of property or business ties, evidence of value and service to the community, evidence of genuine rehabilitation if a criminal record exists, and other evidence attesting to the alien's good character (e.g., affidavits from family, friends, and responsible community representatives). . . .

Id. at 301.

The BIA further states that upon review of the record as a whole, a balancing of the equities and adverse matters must be made to determine whether discretion should be favorably exercised. The equities that the applicant for section 212(i) relief must bring forward to establish that he merits a favorable exercise of administrative discretion will depend in each case on the nature and circumstances of the ground of exclusion sought to be waived and on the presence of any additional adverse matters, and as the negative factors grow more serious, it becomes incumbent upon the applicant to introduce additional offsetting favorable evidence. Id. at 301.

The favorable factors in this matter are the hardship the applicant's United States citizen spouse and children would face if the applicant is not granted this waiver, regardless of whether they accompanied the applicant or remained in the United States; his support from his family; his employment history and community ties, as evidenced by letters and certificates from his employer and proof of his volunteer work; and his apparent lack of a criminal record. The unfavorable factors in this matter are the misrepresentations made by the applicant in order to obtain lawful permanent resident status in the United States.

Although the applicant's violations of immigration law cannot be condoned, the positive factors in this case outweigh the negative factors. In these proceedings, the burden of establishing eligibility for the waiver rests entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. In this case, the applicant has met his burden and the appeal will be sustained.

ORDER: The appeal is sustained.
