DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Director, New York, New York, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Bangladesh who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i), for seeking to procure admission to the United States by fraud or willful misrepresentation of a material fact. The applicant's spouse and two children are U.S. citizens. He seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his family.

The director found that the applicant had failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and the application was denied accordingly. Decision of the Director, at 4, dated November 17, 2009.

On appeal, counsel states that director erred in denying the waiver by not considering the hardship factors, and by basing her decision on the various negative factors in the applicant's immigration history. Form I-290B, at 2, received December 16, 2009.

The record includes, but is not limited to, counsel's brief and I-601 cover letter, the applicant's spouse's statements, a medical letter for the applicant's spouse's mother, and financial records for the applicant and his spouse. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

The record reflects that the applicant attempted to procure admission to the United States on May 25, 1994 by presenting a photo-substituted passport and visa. As such, the applicant is inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that:

- (i) Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.

Section 212(i) of the Act provides that:

- (1) The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] may, in the discretion of the Attorney General [Secretary], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an alien who is the spouse, son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant or children can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

As a qualifying relative is not required to depart the United States as a consequence of an applicant's inadmissibility, two distinct factual scenarios exist should a waiver application be denied: either the qualifying relative will join the applicant to reside abroad or the qualifying relative will remain in the United States. Ascertaining the actual course of action that will be taken is complicated by the fact that an applicant may easily assert a plan for the qualifying relative to relocate abroad or to remain in the United States depending on which scenario presents the greatest prospective hardship, even though no intention exists to carry out the alleged plan in reality. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 885 (BIA 1994) (addressing separation of minor child from both parents applying for suspension of deportation). Thus, we interpret the statutory language of the various waiver provisions in section 212 of the Act to require an applicant to establish extreme hardship to his or her qualifying relative(s) under both possible scenarios. To endure the hardship of separation when extreme hardship could be avoided by joining the applicant abroad, or to endure the hardship of relocation when extreme hardship could be avoided by remaining in the United States, is a matter of choice and not the result of removal or inadmissibility. As the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) stated in Matter of Ige:

[W]e consider the critical issue . . . to be whether a child would suffer extreme hardship if he accompanied his parent abroad. If, as in this case, no hardship would ensue, then the fact that the child might face hardship if left in the United States would be the result of parental choice, not the parent's deportation.

Id. See also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The BIA added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The BIA has also held that the common or typical results of deportation, removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. at 631-32; Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 883; Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the BIA has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

We observe that the actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., In re Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate).

Family separation, for instance, has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal in some cases. See Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. at 813. Nevertheless, family ties are to be considered in analyzing hardship. See Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 565-66. The question of whether family separation is the ordinary result of inadmissibility or removal may depend on the nature of family relationship considered. For example, in Matter of Shaughnessy, the BIA considered the scenario of parents being separated from their soon-to-be adult son, finding that this separation would not result in extreme hardship to the parents. Id. at 811-12; see also U.S. v. Arrieta, 224 F.3d 1076, 1082 (9th Cir. 2000) ("Mr. Arrieta was not a spouse, but a son and brother. It was evident from the record that the effect of the deportation order would be separation rather than relocation."). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board considered the scenario of the respondent's spouse accompanying him to Bangladesh, finding that she would not experience extreme hardship from losing "physical proximity to her family" in the United States. 22 I&N Dec. at 566-67.

The decision in Cervantes-Gonzalez reflects the norm that spouses reside with one another and establish a life together such that separating from one another is likely to result in substantial hardship. It is common for both spouses to relocate abroad if one of them is not allowed to stay in the United States, which typically results in separation from other family members living in the United States. Other decisions reflect the expectation that minor children will remain with their parents, upon whom they usually depend for financial and emotional support. See, e.g., Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 886 ("[I]t is generally preferable for children to be brought up by their parents.”). Therefore, the most important single hardship factor may be separation, particularly where spouses and minor children are concerned. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); Cerrillo-Perez, 809 F.2d at 1422.

Regardless of the type of family relationship involved, the hardship resulting from family separation is determined based on the actual impact of separation on an applicant, and all hardships must be considered in determining whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond the consequences ordinarily associated with removal or inadmissibility. Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. at 383. Nevertheless, though we require an applicant to show that a qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship both in the event of relocation and in the event of separation, in analyzing the latter scenario, we give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship of separation itself, particularly in cases involving the separation of spouses from one another and/or minor children from a parent. Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293.

The first part of the analysis requires the applicant to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative in the event of relocation to Bangladesh. Counsel states that all of the applicant’s spouse’s close family members live in the United States, her parents are U.S. citizens and she has six U.S. citizen siblings; she left Bangladesh in 1980; and she only has a sick grandmother and elderly sick aunt in Bangladesh, both of whom are unable to assist her. Brief in Support of Appeal, at 2, 19-20, dated January 14, 2010. The applicant’s spouse has made several similar statements. Applicant’s Spouse’s Second Statement, at 1-3, dated July 21, 2008. Counsel states that the applicant’s spouse’s mother is frequently bedridden and the applicant’s spouse visits her three to four times a week to assist with housework. Brief in Support of Appeal, at 3. The applicant’s spouse makes similar statements and also states that her mother has suffered from diabetes and high blood pressure for many years. Applicant’s Spouse’s Second Statement, at 2. The record reflects that the applicant’s spouse’s mother is under a doctor’s care for diabetes, hypertension, hyperlipidemia, and anemia. Letter from [REDACTED]

Counsel states that Bangladesh is one of the poorest countries in the world, the applicant’s spouse has no marketable skills and she has never worked. Brief in Support of Appeal, at 2-3, 19-20, dated January 14, 2010. The applicant’s spouse states that she has never been employed. Applicant’s Spouse’s Second Statement, at 2.

The applicant’s spouse states that her children have never been to Bangladesh, her oldest child does not know any Bengali, she knows the conditions in Bangladesh and her children would be heavily affected in a negative way. Applicant’s Spouse’s First Statement, at 2-3, dated October 27, 2006.

The record does not include supporting documentary evidence that the applicant or his spouse could not find employment in Bangladesh. The record does not include supporting documentary evidence that their children would experience hardship in Bangladesh. The record is not clear as to whether one of the applicant’s spouse’s siblings could care for their mother. Going on record without supporting documentation will not meet the applicant’s burden of proof in this proceeding. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

The record reflects that the applicant's spouse would encounter difficulties in relocating to Bangladesh. However, the record does not include sufficient evidence of financial, medical, emotional or other types of hardship, which in their totality, establish that the applicant's spouse would experience extreme hardship if she joined the applicant in Bangladesh.

The second part of the analysis requires the applicant to establish extreme hardship in the event that a qualifying relative remains in the United States. Counsel states that the applicant is the sole source of support for his spouse and children, he earns approximately $26,000 per year, the applicant's spouse has never held a job and she has no marketable skills. Brief in Support of Appeal, at 2-3. The applicant's spouse states that the applicant works as a taxi driver, she is a housewife, he is the sole supporter of the family, he will not be able to replace any part of his income from employment in Bangladesh and he has been away from Bangladesh too long to obtain a job that could support the family. Applicant's Spouse's Second Statement, at 2-3. The record does not reflect that the applicant's spouse would be unable to support her family without the applicant. The record does not include sufficient evidence of financial, medical, emotional or other types of hardship, which in their totality, establish that the applicant's spouse would experience extreme hardship if she remained in the United States.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to a qualifying relative caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in an additional discussion of whether he merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
