Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Atlanta, Georgia, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be sustained.

The applicant is a native and a citizen of Haiti who used a photo-substituted passport and counterfeit I-551 stamp to enter the United States in 1994. The applicant was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i). She is the spouse of a U.S. citizen. The applicant is seeking a waiver under section 212(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i) in order to reside in the United States.

The Field Office Director concluded that the applicant had failed to establish that the bar to her admission would impose extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, her U.S. citizen husband, and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601) on August 1, 2009.

On appeal, counsel for the applicant asserts that the Field Office Director's decision was arbitrary and capricious, and that the record clearly establishes the applicant's spouse will suffer extreme hardship if he had to relocate to Haiti. Form I-290B, received August 31, 2009.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) Misrepresentation, states in pertinent part:

- (i) In general. Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this chapter is inadmissible.

The record indicates that the applicant presented a photo-substituted passport and counterfeit I-551 stamp when entering the United States in 1994, and thus entered the United States by materially misrepresenting her identity. Therefore the applicant is inadmissible pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act.

The record contains, but is not limited to, the following evidence: a brief from counsel; a statement from the applicant; country conditions materials on Haiti; employment verification letters, pay stubs and tax records for the applicant and her spouse; copy of a mortgage note for a residential property; copies of photographs of the applicant and her spouse; and statements from the applicant's church.

The entire record was reviewed and all relevant evidence considered in rendering this decision.

Section 212(i) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

- (1) The Attorney General may, in the discretion of the Attorney General, waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, son, or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien or, in the case of a VAWA self-petitioner, the alien demonstrates extreme hardship to the alien or the alien's United States citizen, lawful permanent resident, or qualified alien parent or child.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O, 21

I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

On appeal, counsel for the applicant asserts that the applicant’s spouse would experience extreme hardship if he had to relocate to Haiti with the applicant. Brief in Support of Appeal, received August 31, 2009. He explains that the applicant’s spouse provides care for his elderly mother and a brother who was disabled by a stroke. He also notes that the applicant’s spouse’s entire family resides near him in the United States, and that together he and his spouse are able to afford their residential property, living expenses and care for the applicant’s spouse’s family.

The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Secretary, Janet Napolitano, determined that an 18-month designation of Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for Haiti was warranted because of the devastating earthquake and aftershocks which occurred on January 12, 2010, a period effective through June 11, 2011. On May 17, 2011, DHS Secretary Janet Napolitano announced an extension of Temporary Protected Status for Haitians, effective through January 13, 2013. As a result, Haitians in the United States are unable to return safely to their country. Even prior to the current catastrophe, Haiti was subject to years of political and social turmoil and natural disasters. In a travel warning issued on January 28, 2009 the U.S. Department of State noted the extensive damage to the country after four hurricanes struck in August and September 2008 and the chronic danger of violent crime, in particular kidnapping. U.S. Department of State, Travel Warning – Haiti, January 28, 2009. Based on the designation of TPS for Haitians and the disastrous conditions that have compounded an already unstable environment and will affect the country and people of Haiti for years to come, the AAO finds that the applicant’s spouse would experience extreme hardship if he were to join the applicant in Haiti.

For the same reasons, the AAO finds that the applicant's spouse would also experience extreme hardship if he were to remain in the United States without the applicant. This finding is based on the extreme emotional harm he will experience due to the emotional stress resulting from the applicant's return to Haiti, a country recently experiencing devastating earthquakes and in a state of national emergency. The emotional stress that would result from a family member having to re-enter a country in Haiti's condition at this time is well beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to most aliens facing exclusion, and therefore constitutes an extreme hardship.

As the record establishes that a qualifying relative will experience extreme hardship upon separation or relocation, the AAO may now consider whether the applicant warrants a waiver as a matter of discretion. In discretionary matters, the alien bears the burden of proving eligibility in terms of equities in the United States which are not outweighed by adverse factors. See Matter of T-S-Y-, 7 I&N Dec. 582 (BIA 1957).

In evaluating whether section 212(h)(1)(B) relief is warranted in the exercise of discretion, the factors adverse to the alien include the nature and underlying circumstances of the exclusion ground at issue, the presence of additional significant violations of this country's immigration laws, the existence of a criminal record, and if so, its nature and seriousness, and the presence of other evidence indicative of the alien's bad character or undesirability as a permanent resident of this country. The favorable considerations include family ties in the United States, residence of long duration in this country (particularly where alien began residency at a young age), evidence of hardship to the alien and his family if he is excluded and deported, service in this country's Armed Forces, a history of stable employment, the existence of property or business ties, evidence of value or service in the community, evidence of genuine rehabilitation if a criminal record exists, and other evidence attesting to the alien's good character (e.g., affidavits from family, friends and responsible community representatives).

See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996). The AAO must then "balance the adverse factors evidencing an alien's undesirability as a permanent resident with the social and humane considerations presented on the alien's behalf to determine whether the grant of relief in the exercise of discretion appears to be in the best interests of the country. " Id. at 300 (Citations omitted).

The AAO finds that the unfavorable factors in this case include the applicant's misrepresentation, unlawful presence and unauthorized employment. The favorable factors in this case include the presence of the applicant's spouse, the hardship the applicant's spouse would experience due to the applicant's inadmissibility, the applicant's long term residence in the United States and the lack of any criminal record for the applicant while resident in the United States. Although the applicant's misrepresentation, unlawful presence and unauthorized employment are serious violations of U.S.

immigration law, the favorable factors in this case outweigh the negative factors, therefore favorable discretion will be exercised. The director's decision will be withdrawn and the appeal will be sustained.

Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361, provides that the burden of proof is upon the applicant to establish that he is eligible for the benefit sought. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is sustained.
