APPLICATION:

Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility under Section 212(i) and of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i)

ON BEHALF OF APPLICANT:

[Redacted]

INSTRUCTIONS:

Enclosed please find the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) in your case. This is a non-precedent decision. The AAO does not announce new constructions of law nor establish agency policy through non-precedent decisions.

Thank you,

Ron Rosenberg
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

(b)(6)

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, St. Paul, Minnesota and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be sustained.

The applicant is a native and citizen of the Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(C)(i), for obtaining an immigration benefit through willful misrepresentation of a material fact. The applicant is the beneficiary of an approved Form I-130, Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). She seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i), in order to live in the United States with her U.S. citizen father.

The director concluded that the applicant failed to establish that extreme hardship would be imposed on a qualifying relative and denied the Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility (Form I-601) accordingly. See Decision of the Field Office Director, dated January 3, 2013.

On appeal, counsel presents new evidence and asserts that the director's decision did not properly weigh the factors of extreme hardship in the aggregate. See Form I-290B, Notice of Appeal or Motion (Form I-290B), filed January 30, 2013, and counsel's brief.

The record contains, but is not limited to: counsel's briefs; various immigration forms; the applicant's father's statements; reports by the applicant's father's psychologists, physician, chiropractor, and college; financial documents; letters from the applicant's employers and friend; birth, marriage and naturalization certificates; passport and identity documents; and country-condition reports. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(6)(C) of the Act provides, in pertinent part that:

- (i) Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.

The record reflects that when the applicant applied for a visitor visa to the United States in March 2010 she indicated that her father did not live in the United States although he had been living in the United States for several years as a lawful permanent resident. This misrepresentation is considered material as it shut off a line of inquiry which would have been relevant to the applicant's eligibility for the benefit sought. Matter of S- and B-C-, 9 I&N Dec. 436, 448-449 (BIA 1960; AG 1961). The applicant is inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act, and counsel does not contest the inadmissibility.

Section 212(i) of the Act states:

- (1) The Attorney General [now Secretary, Department of Homeland Security, "Secretary"] may, in the discretion of the [Secretary], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an alien who is the spouse, son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such an alien.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(i) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship on a qualifying family member, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant, her sister or mother can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. In this case, the applicant's father is the only qualifying relative. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999), the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or U.S. citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

Though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido v. I.N.S., 138 F.3d 1292 (9th Cir. 1998) (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The applicant's father is a 46 year-old native of Mexico and citizen of the United States. He became a lawful permanent resident of the United States in 1984 and a U.S. citizen in 2011. He states that he traveled back and forth to Mexico to visit his family after he moved to the United States, but living apart from them for a number of years has caused him depression. He states, and a letter from his therapist in Mexico confirms, that he received treatment for depression in Mexico from 2001 to 2009. The applicant's father explains that in 2010 he had a breakdown when he realized he had missed so many critical moments of his spouse and daughters' lives. A psychologist in the United States diagnosed him with adjustment disorder with mixed anxiety and depressed mood and reports that he shows symptoms such as isolation, loss of appetite, low energy, lack of interest in previously enjoyable activities, and spontaneous aggression. His psychologist and chiropractor also note that his stress and anxiety have led to chronic musculoskeletal fatigue and severe back pain which impairs his physical ability to function. A letter from a doctor shows that the applicant has sought medical treatment for his back pain and depression. The psychologist indicates that his back pain is tied to his emotional well-being as it improved greatly when his wife and children came to the United States in 2011. After receiving the decision of the applicant's waiver application, his depression and pain worsened. He states that he has fallen into a deep depression, is experiencing extreme stress and has frequent migraines. The psychologist states that his fear that criminals will target and harm the applicant in Mexico because they perceive people who return after living in the United States to have wealth have kept the applicant from sleeping and from concentrating on his normal activities, which has led to increased levels of physical pain and a depressive state.

The applicant's father states that he would not be able to afford his expenses without the applicant. Financial documents show that the applicant contributes approximately one-fifth to their family's income which also helps to pay the debt of over $75,000 that the applicant's father has accrued. The applicant's father has also been admitted to a community and technical college and indicates that he would not be able to pursue his desire for higher education without the applicant's financial support. He also laments that if the applicant were to be separated again, he would once again need to support his household and his family's in Mexico which led to his current debt.

The AAO has considered cumulatively all assertions of separation-related hardship to the applicant's father, including his mental, emotional and physical health, financial responsibilities and limitations without the applicant, and his inability to afford a household in the United States and Mexico.

Considered in the aggregate, the AAO finds that the evidence is sufficient to demonstrate that the applicant's U.S. citizen father would suffer extreme hardship due to separation from the applicant.

The applicant's father states that he cannot relocate to Mexico because of the debt he has incurred in the United States, his inability to pursue higher education, the minimum employment opportunities in Mexico given his age, and the violence in general in Mexico and specifically where his family lived in [REDACTED] Country-condition reports as well as the most recent U.S. Department of State Travel Warning for Mexico dated July 12, 2013 indicate an numerous kidnappings and murders by translational criminal organizations and drug cartels and warn against non-essential travel for U.S. citizens specifically to [REDACTED] because of the increase in violent crimes in the last six months.

The AAO has considered cumulatively all assertions of relocation-related hardship to the applicant's father, including his length of residence in the United States, his age, his health concerns, his financial obligations in the United States, his loss of employment and educational opportunities, and stated safety-related concerns in Mexico. Considered in the aggregate, the AAO finds that the evidence is sufficient to demonstrate that the applicant's U.S. citizen father would suffer extreme hardship were he to relocate to the Mexico to be with the applicant.

Extreme hardship is a requirement for eligibility, but once established it is but one favorable discretionary factor to be considered. Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. at 301. For waivers of inadmissibility, the burden is on the applicant to establish that a grant of a waiver of inadmissibility is warranted in the exercise of discretion. Id. at 299. The adverse factors evidencing an alien's undesirability as a permanent resident must be balanced with the social and humane considerations presented on her behalf to determine whether the grant of relief in the exercise of discretion appears to be in the best interests of this country. Id. at 300.

In Matter of Mendez-Morales, in evaluating whether section 212(h)(1)(B) relief is warranted in the exercise of discretion, the Board stated that:

The factors adverse to the applicant include the nature and underlying circumstances of the exclusion ground at issue, the presence of additional significant violations of this country's immigration laws, the existence of a criminal record and, if so, its nature, recency and seriousness, and the presence of other evidence indicative of an alien's bad character or undesirability as a permanent resident of this country. . . . The favorable considerations include family ties in the United States, residence of long duration in this country (particularly where the alien began his residency at a young age), evidence of hardship to the alien and his family if he is excluded and deported, service in this country's Armed Forces, a history of stable employment, the existence of property or business ties, evidence of value and service to the community, evidence of genuine rehabilitation if a criminal record exists, and other evidence attesting to the alien's good character (e.g., affidavits from family, friends, and responsible community representatives).

The Board further states that upon review of the record as a whole, a balancing of the equities and adverse matters must be made to determine whether discretion should be favorably exercised. The equities that the applicant for section 212(i) relief must bring forward to establish that she merits a favorable exercise of administrative discretion will depend in each case on the nature and circumstances of the ground of exclusion sought to be waived and on the presence of any additional adverse matters, and as the negative factors grow more serious, it becomes incumbent upon the applicant to introduce additional offsetting favorable evidence. Id. at 301.

The favorable factors in this matter are the applicant's U.S. citizen father, the extreme hardship he would face if the applicant is not granted this waiver, whether he accompanied her or remained in the United States, her good moral character as shown in various letters, and her lack of a criminal record. The unfavorable factor in this matter is the applicant's misrepresentation that her father did not live in the United States on her visitor visa application from 2010. Although the applicant's violation of immigration law cannot be condoned, the positive factors in this case outweigh the negative factor.

In these proceedings, the burden of establishing eligibility for the waiver rests entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. In this case, the applicant has met her burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be sustained.

ORDER: The appeal is sustained.
