Acting Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The Field Office Director, St. Albans, Vermont, denied the waiver application and the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) dismissed a subsequent appeal. The matter is now before the AAO on motion. The motion will be granted and the underlying application remains denied.

The record reflects that the applicant is a native and citizen of China who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act for fraud or willful misrepresentation of a material fact in order to obtain an immigration benefit. The applicant is married to a U.S. citizen and seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(i) of the Act in order to reside with her husband in the United States.

The director found that the applicant failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly. The AAO dismissed the appeal, finding that the applicant's husband, [REDACTED] did not address the possibility of returning to China to avoid the hardship of separation, and that there was insufficient evidence in the record to establish extreme hardship if he decides to remain in the United States.

On motion, [REDACTED] submits a new letter detailing his hardship if his wife's application were denied. He also submits other evidence in support of the motion.

A motion to reopen must state the new facts to be proved in the reopened proceeding and be supported by affidavits or other documentary evidence. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(2). A motion to reconsider must state the reasons for reconsideration and be supported by any pertinent precedent decisions to establish that the decision was based on an incorrect application of law or Service policy. A motion to reconsider a decision on an application or petition must, when filed, also establish that the decision was incorrect based on the evidence of record at the time of the initial decision. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(3). A motion that does not meet applicable requirements shall be dismissed. 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(4).

Here, the applicant's husband has submitted a letter and new documentary evidence to support the applicant's waiver application. The submission meets the requirements of a motion to reopen. Accordingly, the motion is granted.

In addition to the evidence already described in the AAO's previous decisions, the record now also contains an updated letter from the applicant's husband, [REDACTED] a copy of a purchase and sale agreement for the couple's new house, and [REDACTED] Social Security statement.¹ The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision on the appeal.

¹ The AAO notes that the record contains some documents that are written in Chinese and have not been translated into English. The regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 103.2(b)(3) requires that any document containing foreign language submitted to United States Citizenship and Immigration Services be accompanied by a full English language translation which the translator has certified as complete and accurate, and by the translator's certification that he or she is competent to translate from the foreign language into English. Consequently, these documents cannot be considered.

Section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

In general.—Any alien who, by fraud or willfully misrepresenting a material fact, seeks to procure (or has sought to procure or has procured) a visa, other documentation, or admission into the United States or other benefit provided under this Act is inadmissible.

Section 212(i) provides, in pertinent part:

- (1) The Attorney General [now Secretary of Homeland Security] may, in the discretion of the Attorney General [now Secretary of Homeland Security], waive the application of clause (i) of subsection (a)(6)(C) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse, son, or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to the United States of such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully permanent resident spouse or parent of such an alien

In this case, the AAO previously found that the applicant is inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C)(i) of the Act for willful misrepresentation of a material fact in order to procure an immigration benefit. This finding of inadmissibility is not contested on motion.

Extreme hardship is “not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning,” but “necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case.” Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative’s family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative’s ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one’s present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22

I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

After a careful review of the record, the AAO finds that if the applicant’s husband, [REDACTED] returned to China, where he was born, to avoid the hardship of separation from the applicant, he would experience extreme hardship. The AAO acknowledges [REDACTED] contentions that when he lived in China during the Cultural Revolution, his father was jailed by the communist party, his mother was forced to remarry a person whom the communist party assigned, and he was beaten, all on account of his family’s Nationalist background and family ties in Taiwan. In addition, the record shows that Mr. [REDACTED] has lived and worked in the United States for approximately thirty years. Moreover, the AAO acknowledges [REDACTED] contention that he has no family members remaining in China. Considering these unique factors cumulatively, the AAO finds that the hardship [REDACTED] would experience if he relocated to China to be with his wife is extreme, going well beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with inadmissibility or exclusion.

However, there is insufficient evidence showing that [REDACTED] will suffer extreme hardship if remains in the United States without his wife. The AAO recognizes [REDACTED] contentions that he is sixty-three years old, will soon be retired, and will be miserable without his wife. Nonetheless, although the AAO is sympathetic to the couple's circumstances, if [REDACTED] decides to remain in the United States without his wife, their situation is typical of individuals separated as a result of inadmissibility or exclusion and does not rise to the level of extreme hardship based on the record. Regarding financial hardship, there is no evidence in the record to corroborate [REDACTED]'s claims that he gave away all of his savings to his ex-wife or that he withdrew most of his retirement fund to invest in a nail salon with his wife. Rather than showing financial hardship upon separation from his wife, according to a copy of a Purchase and Sales Agreement submitted on motion, the couple recently purchased a house together in November 2012 which they plan on allowing their salon employees to live in for free as a "fringe benefit." Moreover, as stated in the AAO's previous decision, the couple contends that their nail salon generates approximately $300,000 per year, not including tips, and the record shows that [REDACTED] is also employed at a casino. Although [REDACTED] may experience some financial challenges if he remains in the United States without his wife, the record does not show that he would suffer any hardship that would be unique or atypical compared to others separated from a spouse as a result of inadmissibility or exclusion. See Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship and defining extreme hardship as hardship that was unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected upon deportation). Moreover, the AAO notes that although the record shows that [REDACTED] has some medical conditions, no additional medical or psychological evidence has been submitted on motion and there is no suggestion he requires his wife's assistance for any health condition. Even considering all of the factors in the case cumulatively, there is insufficient evidence showing that the hardship the applicant's husband will experience amounts to extreme hardship.

We can find extreme hardship warranting a waiver of inadmissibility only where an applicant has demonstrated extreme hardship to a qualifying relative in the scenario of separation and the scenario of relocation. A claim that a qualifying relative will relocate and thereby suffer extreme hardship can easily be made for purposes of the waiver even where there is no actual intention to relocate. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 886 (BIA 1994). Furthermore, to relocate and suffer extreme hardship, where remaining in the United States and being separated from the applicant would not result in extreme hardship, is a matter of choice and not the result of inadmissibility. Id., also cf. Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996). As the applicant has not demonstrated extreme hardship from separation, we cannot find that refusal of admission would result in extreme hardship to the applicant's husband, the only qualifying relative in this case.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant's husband caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether she merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In application proceedings, it is the applicant's burden to establish eligibility for the immigration benefit sought. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The motion is granted but the underlying waiver application remains denied.
