Perry Rhew
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The District Director, Mexico City, denied the instant waiver application. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

An attorney signed the appeal in this matter. That attorney, however, did not file a Form G-28, Notice of Entry of Appearance. The record contains no indication that the applicant has agreed to be represented by counsel. All representations will be considered, but the decision will be furnished only to the applicant.

The record shows that the applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico. In a decision dated December 7, 2006 the district director found that the applicant accrued unlawful presence in the United States from his entry without inspection during 1993 until he voluntarily departed during March of 2006. The district director therefore found the applicant inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182 (a)(9)(B)(i)(II) for having been unlawfully present in the United States longer than one year and seeking admission within ten years of her last departure.

The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182 (a)(9)(B)(v), in order to reside in the United States with her husband. The district director also concluded that the applicant had failed to establish that the bar to admission would impose extreme hardship on the applicant's spouse and denied the waiver application accordingly. On appeal, the applicant reiterated her claim that to deny the waiver application will cause extreme hardship to her husband.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(i) In general. - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(I) was unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than 180 days but less than 1 year, voluntarily departed the United States . . . prior to the commencement of proceedings under section 235(b)(1) or section 240, and again seeks admission within 3 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal, or

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver. - The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

The record confirms that the applicant entered the United States without inspection during 1993 and accrued unlawful presence from that date until departing voluntarily during March of 2006. The applicant is seeking admission to the United States. The applicant has not disputed her inadmissibility on appeal. The AAO therefore affirms the district director's finding that the applicant is inadmissible pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act.

The record contains a letter dated March 7, 2006 from the applicant's husband, but no other evidence pertinent to hardship he will suffer if the waiver application is not approved. In his letter, the applicant's husband stated that he misses the applicant and their child very much and wants them to return to the United States. The applicant's husband did not address the possibility that he might return to Mexico.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act is dependent upon a showing that the bar to admission imposes an extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, i.e., the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant is not directly relevant under the statute and will be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative in the application. The applicant's husband is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the Secretary then assesses whether an exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

The concept of extreme hardship to a qualifying relative "is not . . . fixed and inflexible," and whether extreme hardship has been established is determined based on an examination of the facts of each individual case. Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) set forth a nonexclusive list of factors relevant to determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. These factors include, with respect to the qualifying relative, the presence of family ties to U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents in the United States, family ties outside the United States, country conditions where the qualifying relative would relocate and family ties in that country, the financial impact of departure, and significant health conditions, particularly where there is diminished availability of medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. at 566. The BIA also held that:

Relevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists. In each case, the trier of fact must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.

Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996). (Citations omitted).

U. S. courts have stated, "the most important single hardship factor may be the separation of the alien from family living in the United States," and also, "[w]hen the BIA fails to give considerable, if not predominant, weight to the hardship that will result from family separation, it has abused its discretion." Salcido-Salcido v. INS, 138 F.3d 1292, 1293 (9th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted); Cerrillo-Perez v. INS, 809 F.2d 1419, 1424 (9th Cir. 1987) (remanding to BIA) ("We have stated in a series of cases that the hardship to the alien resulting from his separation from family members may, in itself, constitute extreme hardship.") (citations omitted). Separation of family will therefore be given appropriate weight in the assessment of hardship factors in the present case.

The AAO notes, however, that the courts have repeatedly held that the common results of removal or inadmissibility are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991). The common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship as extreme hardship has generally been defined as hardship that is unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected upon deportation. See Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996); see also Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996) (holding that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810 (BIA 1968) (holding that separation of family members and financial difficulties alone do not establish extreme hardship). "[O]nly in cases of great actual or prospective injury . . . will the bar be removed." Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246 (BIA 1984).

An analysis under Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez is appropriate. The AAO notes that the applicant must establish that extreme hardship will result to her husband in the event that he joins her in Mexico and in the event that he remains in the United States, as a qualifying relative is not required to reside outside of the United States based on the denial of the applicant's waiver request.

The record, reviewed in its entirety and in light of the Cervantes-Gonzalez factors, cited above, does not support a finding that, if the applicant remains in Mexico, and the applicant's husband remains in the United States, the applicant's husband will experience extreme hardship as a consequence of his separation from the applicant. Further, the record does not support a finding that the applicant's husband will face extreme hardship if he relocates to Mexico to live with the applicant.

In nearly every qualifying relationship, whether between husband and wife or parent and child, there is affection and a certain amount of emotional and social interdependence. While, in common parlance, separation or relocation nearly always results in considerable hardship to individuals and families, in specifically limiting the availability of a waiver of inadmissibility to cases of "extreme hardship," Congress made plain that it did not intend that a waiver be granted in every case where a qualifying relationship, and thus the familial and emotional bonds, exists.

Separation from one's spouse or child is, by its very nature, a hardship. The point made in this and prior decisions on this matter, however, is that the law requires that, in order to meet the standard in INA § 212(i), the hardship must be greater than the normal, expected hardship involved in such cases.

In this case, the record does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. The AAO therefore finds that the applicant failed to establish extreme hardship to her U.S. citizen husband as required under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether she merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility rests with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
