DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, San Bernardino, CA. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more and seeking readmission within 10 years of his last departure from the United States. The applicant's spouse and child are U.S. citizens and he seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States.

The field office director found that the applicant had failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and the application was denied accordingly. Decision of the Field Office Director, dated May 3, 2011.

On appeal, the applicant's spouse asserts she would experience extreme hardship if the applicant is not granted a waiver of inadmissibility. See Statement from the Applicant's Spouse, dated June 15, 2011.

The record includes, but is not limited to, the applicant's spouse's statements, a statement from the applicant's father-in-law, medical records for the applicant's spouse, a letter from a landlord for rental property, receipt and payment history documents, and various immigration application forms. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) Aliens Unlawfully Present.-

- (i) In general.-Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

- (II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

- (v) Waiver.-The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security, "Secretary"] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

The record reflects that the applicant entered the United States without inspection sometime in 2001 and remained until his voluntary departure sometime in 2010. The applicant is therefore inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act for being unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of his departure from the United States.

A section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver of the bar to admission resulting from section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act is dependent first upon a showing that the bar imposes an extreme hardship to the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant or his children is not considered in section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) waiver proceedings unless it causes hardship to a qualifying relative, in this case the applicant's spouse. Once extreme hardship is established, it is but one favorable factor to be considered in the determination of whether the Secretary should exercise discretion. See Matter of Mendez, 21 I&N Dec. 296 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning." but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22

I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The applicant’s spouse states that the applicant lived with her from the time they were married until his departure for visa processing, and they have remained in a committed relationship despite this separation. She also indicates that she is struggling financially and emotionally to maintain two households since the applicant is having difficulty gaining employment while in Mexico. The applicant’s spouse also indicated that she is experiencing stress and has been diagnosed with depression because she has found herself taking care of their child alone as well as all of the financial responsibilities. See letters from [REDACTED]. The applicant’s spouse states that she cannot live in Mexico because all of her family lives in the United States except the applicant and there are serious social problems in that country which would make it difficult to remain there

The applicant’s spouse has offered some information to indicate that her life has become more difficult without the applicant’s presence. However, the evidence is insufficient to establish that these issues, in the aggregate, are more than that which would be expected under circumstances such as these where one’s immediate family member is found to be inadmissible. The applicant provided a letter from [REDACTED] M.S. at [REDACTED] Institute indicating a tentative diagnosis that the applicant's spouse is experiencing a major depressive disorder, but he advised her to follow-up with a physician regarding any possible medication treatment. The letter also expresses that the applicant's spouse received two behavioral health sessions as a course of treatment, but there was no specific information provided as to what type of therapy took place during these sessions, or whether other causation factors were explored. See letter from [REDACTED] M.S. dated June 2, 2011.

In addition, although the applicant also provided a letter from a physician regarding his qualifying relative's circumstances, this letter did not provide anything more than a reiteration of his spouse's statements with no further medical prognosis indicated. Moreover, according to the letterhead on the proffered letter, the doctor is a specialist in Obstetrics and Gynecology, and the foundation for her expertise to render a professional opinion on mental health conditions has not been established. See letter from [REDACTED] M.D., dated November 19, 2010.

The applicant also provided additional evidence in support of the assertion that his qualifying spouse is undergoing hardship beyond that which would be normally expected under the circumstances in the form of a letter from [REDACTED] the applicant's spouse and another from [REDACTED] the applicant's father-in-law. See letters from [REDACTED] dated June 15, 2011 and [REDACTED] dated June 16, 2011. However, this evidence was found to be insufficient for the purpose of establishing that the conditions the applicant's spouse is currently experiencing rise to a level which would meet the extreme hardship standard.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, no purpose would be served in discussing whether he merits a waiver under as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
