Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Mexico City, Mexico, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of his last departure from the United States. The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. Citizen spouse and child.

The Field Office Director concluded the applicant failed to demonstrate extreme hardship to a qualifying and denied the application accordingly. See Decision of Field Office Director dated April 30, 2010.

On appeal, the applicant's spouse indicates she experiences emotional and financial difficulties due to the present separation from the applicant. She moreover contends that she could not return to Mexico because of personal safety concerns, her inability to find employment there, and the inadequate medical system.

The record includes, but is not limited to, statements from the applicant's spouse, a psychological evaluation, evidence of birth, marriage, death, residence, and citizenship, letters of support from family and friends, medical records, photographs, and other applications and petitions filed on behalf of the applicant. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering a decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(9) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) ALIENS UNLAWFULLY PRESENT.-

(i) In general.- Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(ii) Construction of unlawful presence.- For purposes of this paragraph, an alien is deemed to be unlawfully present in the United States if the alien is present in the United States after the expiration of the period of stay authorized by the Attorney General or is present in the United States without being admitted or paroled.

(v) Waiver.-The Attorney General has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien. No court shall have jurisdiction to review a decision or action by the Attorney General regarding a waiver under this clause.

The applicant admitted under oath that he entered the United States without inspection in August 1998 and returned to Mexico in April 2009. Inadmissibility is not contested on appeal. The applicant is therefore inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act for accruing more than one year of unlawful presence from August 1998 to April 2009. The applicant's qualifying relative for a waiver of this inadmissibility is his U.S. Citizen spouse.

The record contains references to hardship the applicant's child would experience if the waiver application were denied. It is noted that Congress did not include hardship to an alien's children as a factor to be considered in assessing extreme hardship. In the present case, the applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative for the waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, and hardship to the applicant's child will not be separately considered, except as it may affect the applicant's spouse.

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The applicant’s spouse contends she experiences financial and emotional hardship without the applicant present. A psychological evaluation indicates she works as a housekeeper, has moved in with her mother and sisters because she is unable to pay for rent, and her mother takes care of her child while she is working. The evaluator explains that the applicant was the primary income earner in the household before he returned to Mexico. The psychological evaluation moreover states that the applicant’s spouse experiences generalized anxiety disorder and depression without the applicant, and the son suffers from separation anxiety disorder. A certificate of death for the spouse’s father is present in the record.

The applicant’s spouse asserts she would be unable to return to Mexico because her and her son’s medical needs would not be met in that country, and she has access to health insurance in the United States. She adds that she would not be able to find a job in Mexico, and she would be separated from her family in the United States. The spouse explains that if she relocated she would no longer be able to take care of her mother who is ill. Medical records, letters from family members, as well as evidence of their residence and citizenship are submitted in support. The applicant's spouse also expresses concern about violent crime and other safety issues in Mexico.

Assertions of financial hardship are not supported by evidence of record. Although the applicant's spouse's assertions are relevant and have been taken into consideration, little weight can be afforded them in the absence of supporting evidence. See Matter of Kwan, 14 I&N Dec. 175 (BIA 1972) ("Information in an affidavit should not be disregarded simply because it appears to be hearsay; in administrative proceedings, that fact merely affects the weight to be afforded it."). Going on record without supporting documentary evidence is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)). Without supporting evidence on the spouse's and the applicant's household expenses and income, the AAO is unable to assess the nature and extent of financial hardship, if any, the applicant's spouse will face.

The applicant's spouse submits a death certificate for her father, which indicates that he died on March 23, 2009. It is noted that neither the psychological evaluation nor the spouse discusses the impact of her father's death on the spouse's emotional well-being. The record does reflect that the applicant's spouse experiences some psychological distress given the current separation from the applicant. While the AAO acknowledges that the applicant's spouse would face difficulties as a result of the applicant's inadmissibility, we do not find evidence of record to demonstrate that her hardship would rise above the distress normally created when families are separated as a result of inadmissibility or removal. In that the record fails to provide sufficient evidence to establish the financial, emotional or other impacts of separation on the applicant's spouse are cumulatively above and beyond the hardships commonly experienced, the AAO cannot conclude that she would suffer extreme hardship if the waiver application is denied and the applicant remains in Mexico without his spouse.

The applicant's spouse claims the applicant is constantly in danger in Mexico, and she would also be in similar danger if she relocated to that country. The U.S. Department of State indicates in its travel warning that millions of U.S. Citizens safely visit Mexico each year for study, tourism, and business, and that many areas in Mexico are not targeted for drug-related violence and crime. Travel warning: Mexico, U.S. Department of State, February 8, 2012. It is also noted that the applicant resides in Oaxaca, Mexico, an area for which there is no travel advisory in effect. Id. Without evidence that the applicant's spouse, who is a native of Mexico, would be specifically targeted for crime or violence in the area she would relocate to, the AAO cannot determine what, if any, safety issues the spouse will face in Mexico.

The applicant's spouse contends her mother would be left alone without her, and that she would be unable to help her mother with her illness if she relocated. However, the record reflects that the applicant's spouse lives with her mother and sisters, and it is unclear why those family members would be unable to assist their mother. Furthermore, there is no explanation in plain language from the mother's treating physician of the exact nature and severity of any condition and a description of any treatment or family assistance needed. Without that explanation, the AAO is not in the position to reach conclusions concerning the severity of a medical condition or the treatment needed and the consequent hardship on the applicant's spouse if she relocated away from her mother. Moreover, the record lacks sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the spouse herself has serious medical conditions for which she would be unable to access treatment in Mexico.

The record also lacks evidence to demonstrate the applicant's spouse would experience financial hardship as well as difficulty finding employment in Mexico. As discussed above, without supporting evidence the AAO cannot determine the nature and extent of financial hardship the spouse will experience upon relocation to Mexico.

The AAO notes that relocation to Mexico would entail separation from family members who live in the United States as well as other difficulties. However, we do not find evidence of record to show that the spouse's difficulties would rise above the hardship commonly created when families relocate as a result of inadmissibility or removal. In that the record lacks sufficient evidence to demonstrate the emotional, financial, medical, or other impacts of relocation on the applicant's spouse are in the aggregate above and beyond the hardships normally experienced, the AAO cannot conclude that she would experience extreme hardship if the waiver application is denied and the applicant's spouse relocates to Mexico.

In this case, the record does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. The AAO therefore finds that the applicant has failed to establish extreme hardship to his U.S. Citizen spouse as required under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. As the applicant has not established extreme hardship to a qualifying family member no purpose would be served in determining whether the applicant merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for a waiver of grounds of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
