Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Field Office Director, Santo Domingo. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The record reflects that the applicant is a native and citizen of Dominica who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year. The applicant is married to a U.S. citizen and seeks a waiver of inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act in order to reside with his wife in the United States.

The field office director found that the applicant failed to establish extreme hardship to a qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly.

On appeal, the applicant's wife contends she would suffer extreme hardship if her husband's waiver application were denied, particularly considering her parents' health problems. Specifically, the applicant's wife contends that her mother is recovering from breast cancer and her father had a bad car accident. She contends she needs to provide emotional and financial support for her parents.

The record contains, inter alia: a copy of the marriage certificate for the applicant and his wife, [REDACTED], indicating they were married on [REDACTED] a brief and a letter from [REDACTED] copies of [REDACTED] mother's medical records; a Background Note on conditions in Dominica; and an approved Petition for Alien Relative (Form I-130). The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision on the appeal.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(i) In General - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who -

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver. - The Attorney General [now the Secretary of Homeland Security (Secretary)] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General [Secretary] that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

In this case, the record shows, and the applicant does not contest, that he entered the United States on September 19, 2005, as a visitor and did not timely depart the United States. The applicant remained in the United States until his departure on February 7, 2010. The applicant accrued unlawful presence of over one year. He now seeks admission within ten years of his February 2010 departure. Accordingly, he is inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act for being unlawfully present in the United States for a period of one year or more and seeking admission to the United States within ten years of his last departure.

Extreme hardship is “not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning,” but “necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case.” Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative’s family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative’s ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one’s present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm’r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

In this case, the applicant’s wife, [REDACTED] states that her parents are elderly and very ill. According to [REDACTED] her mother has high blood pressure and is recovering from breast cancer, and her father also has high blood pressure, suffered severe internal injuries in a car accident, and frequents the hospital because of ongoing medical issues. In addition, [REDACTED] states that if her husband lives in the United States with her, they will do better financially because their bills will be consolidated, enabling them to save money to start a family. Furthermore, [REDACTED] states she cannot move to Dominica to be with her husband because it is a third world country and she would be unable to find a job. She states she would have to take her parents with her to Dominica where the medical facilities are substandard.

After a careful review of the record, there is insufficient evidence to show that [REDACTED] has suffered or will suffer extreme hardship if her husband’s waiver application were denied. If [REDACTED] decides to stay in the United States, their situation is typical of individuals separated as a result of inadmissibility or exclusion and does not rise to the level of extreme hardship based on the record. Regarding [REDACTED] parents’ medical problems, the record contains documentation corroborating [REDACTED] contention that her mother is recovering from breast cancer. However, there is no evidence in the record stating that [REDACTED] mother requires her daughter’s assistance and according to [REDACTED] Biographic Information form (Form G-325A), [REDACTED] lives in Florida while her mother lives in the U.S. Virgin Islands. There is no indication in the record that [REDACTED] currently assists her mother with any health care needs. With respect to [REDACTED] father’s purported medical problems, the record does not contain any documentation corroborating [REDACTED] claim that he has medical problems. The AAO notes that neither of [REDACTED] parents has submitted a letter for the record. Although the AAO is sympathetic to the family’s circumstances, without more detailed information, the AAO is not in the position to reach conclusions regarding the severity of any medical condition or the treatment and assistance needed. To the extent [REDACTED] makes a financial hardship claim, there are no financial documents in the record to support her claim. In sum, there is insufficient documentation in the record to show that the applicant's situation is unique or atypical compared to other individuals in similar circumstances. See Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the common results of deportation are insufficient to prove extreme hardship and defining extreme hardship as hardship that was unusual or beyond that which would normally be expected). Even considering all of these factors cumulatively, there is insufficient evidence showing that the hardship the applicant's wife has experienced or will experience amounts to extreme hardship.

Furthermore, the record does not show that [REDACTED] would suffer extreme hardship if she relocated to Dominica to be with her husband. The record does not show that [REDACTED] adjustment to living in Dominica would be any more difficult than would normally be expected. Although [REDACTED] contends her parents would have to relocate to Dominica to be with her, as stated above, the record shows that [REDACTED] currently does not live close to her parents and she does not address how often she sees either of her parents. Even considering all of the evidence cumulatively, the record does not show that the applicant's wife's hardship would be extreme, or that their situation is unique or atypical compared to others in similar circumstances. Perez v. INS, supra.

A review of the documentation in the record fails to establish the existence of extreme hardship to the applicant's wife caused by the applicant's inadmissibility to the United States. Having found the applicant statutorily ineligible for relief, no purpose would be served in discussing whether he merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In proceedings for application for waiver of grounds of inadmissibility, the burden of proving eligibility remains entirely with the applicant. See Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, the applicant has not met that burden. Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
