Acting Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The International Adjudications Support Branch denied the waiver application on behalf of the Field Office Director, Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, and the matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of her last departure from the United States. The applicant is a beneficiary of an approved Petition for Alien Relative, as a spouse of a U.S. citizen, who seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse and children.

The Field Office Director concluded that the record failed to establish the existence of extreme hardship for a qualifying relative and denied the application accordingly. See Decision of the Field Office Director, dated August 13, 2012.

On appeal, filed on August 31, 2012 and received by the AAO on March 14, 2013, the applicant submitted further documentation and requested a reconsideration of the field office denial of his waiver application.

In support of the waiver application and appeal, the applicant submitted letters from his spouse, letters of support, medical documentation concerning his spouse and children, financial documentation, identity documents, family photographs, and background information concerning Mexico. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act, in pertinent part, provides:

(B) ALIENS UNLAWFULLY PRESENT.-

- (i) In general.- Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(v) Waiver.-The Attorney General has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien. No court shall have jurisdiction to review a decision or action by the Attorney General regarding a waiver under this clause.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who claims to have entered the United States without admission or parole in 2004. The applicant departed the United States in September 2009. The applicant accrued unlawful presence in the United States from his initial entry into the United States until his departure. Accordingly, the applicant accrued over one year of unlawful presence in the United States, and is inadmissible under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Act.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. Hardship to the applicant can be considered only insofar as it results in hardship to a qualifying relative. The applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that “[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists.” Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido, 138 F.3d at 1293 (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The record reflects that the applicant is a 28-year-old native and citizen of Mexico. The applicant’s spouse is a 23-year-old native and citizen of the United States. The applicant is currently residing in Sonora, Mexico and his spouse resides with their children in Phoenix, Arizona.

The applicant’s spouse asserts that she is receiving financial assistance because she is the mother of two children and not employed. The record contains supporting documentation for the applicant’s spouse’s assertions concerning governmental assistance. The applicant’s spouse asserts that the applicant should be in the United States providing financial support for their family and that the applicant’s spouse should be at home with the children. The applicant’s spouse further asserts that if she had to find work, it would be difficult to leave her children with other caretakers. The applicant’s spouse resides in her parents’ home and states that she relies upon her family members, including her mother and sister, for financial assistance. There is no indication that the applicant’s spouse would be unable to secure employment, if sought. There is also no indication that the applicant’s spouse is unable to meet her current financial obligations. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence generally is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

The applicant's spouse asserts that she loves the applicant and wants her children to grow up in the presence of the applicant. The applicant's spouse also asserts that she is concerned for the applicant's safety during his residence in Mexico. The applicant's spouse contends that the applicant's immigration issues are causing her severe stress so that she is experiencing headaches and has noticed hair loss. The record contains a physician's letter stating that the applicant's spouse has been diagnosed with post-partum depression and is currently receiving medications for headaches, hair loss, and fatigue. It is noted that there is no medical documentation in the record indicating that the applicant's spouse is experiencing these symptoms for any other reason. It is acknowledged that separation from a spouse often creates hardship for both parties and the evidence indicates that the applicant's spouse is suffering emotional hardship due to separation from the applicant. However, there is insufficient evidence in the record, in the aggregate, to find that the applicant's spouse is suffering extreme hardship upon separation from the applicant.

Although the depth of concern and anxiety over the applicant's immigration status is neither doubted nor minimized, the fact remains that Congress provided for a waiver of inadmissibility only under limited circumstances. While the prospect of separation or involuntary relocation nearly always results in considerable hardship to individuals and families, in specifically limiting the availability of a waiver of inadmissibility to cases of "extreme hardship," Congress did not intend that a waiver be granted in every case where a qualifying relationship exists.

The applicant's spouse asserts that she cannot relocate to Mexico to reside with the applicant because she is not accustomed to the country and her family would lose their benefits, including health insurance, in the United States. As noted, the record contains supporting documentation indicating that the applicant's spouse is receiving governmental assistance in the United States. It is also noted that the applicant's spouse is a native of the United States who resides with family members, upon whom she relies for financial support.

The applicant's spouse asserts that the applicant would be unable to financially support their family in Mexico and she would fear for her safety if she relocated. The applicant's spouse contends that the applicant is working as a mason helper in Mexico, but only on an as-needed basis. The record contains a letter from the applicant's employer stating that it is difficult to find employment in Puerto Pañasco, Mexico, where the applicant currently resides, so that work is not always available for the applicant. The applicant also submitted background country conditions for Mexico, including the area of his residence. It is noted that the Department of State, on November 20, 2012, issued travel warnings concerning Mexico, including Puerto Pañasco, Sonora. The relevant portion of the travel warnings state that Sonora is a key region in the international drug and human trafficking trades, and can be extremely dangerous for travelers. U.S. citizens are warned to exercise caution and high level of vigilance in Puerto Pañasco.

In this case, the record contains sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, in the aggregate, would rise to the level of extreme hardship if she relocated to Mexico. The record, however, does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative upon separation, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. U.S. court decisions have repeatedly held that the common results of removal are insufficient to prove extreme hardship. See Hassan v. INS, 927 F.2d 465, 468 (9th Cir. 1991), Perez v. INS, 96 F.3d 390 (9th Cir. 1996); Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627 (BIA 1996) (holding that emotional hardship caused by severing family and community ties is a common result of deportation and does not constitute extreme hardship); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810 (BIA 1968) (holding that separation of family members and financial difficulties alone do not establish extreme hardship). “[O]nly in cases of great actual or prospective injury . . . will the bar be removed.” Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246 (BIA 1984).

We can find extreme hardship warranting a waiver of inadmissibility only where an applicant has demonstrated extreme hardship to a qualifying relative in the scenario of separation and the scenario of relocation. A claim that a qualifying relative will relocate and thereby suffer extreme hardship can easily be made for purposes of the waiver even where there is no actual intention to relocate. Cf. Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 886 (BIA 1994). Furthermore, to relocate and suffer extreme hardship, where remaining the United States and being separated from the applicant would not result in extreme hardship, is a matter of choice and not the result of inadmissibility. Id., also cf. Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996). As the applicant has not demonstrated extreme hardship from separation, we cannot find that refusal of admission would result in extreme hardship to the qualifying relative in this case.

The AAO therefore finds that the applicant has failed to establish extreme hardship to his U.S. citizen spouse as required under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. As the applicant has not established extreme hardship to a qualifying family member, no purpose would be served in balancing positive and negative factors to determine whether the applicant merits this waiver as a matter of discretion.

In application proceedings, it is the applicant's burden to establish eligibility for the immigration benefit sought. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
