DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the International Adjudications Support Branch on behalf of the Field Office Director, Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be dismissed.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Mexico who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and again seeking admission within 10 years of her last departure from the United States. The record reflects that the applicant entered the United States without inspection in February 2002 and remained until departing in December 2011. The applicant is the spouse of a United States lawful permanent resident and seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with her spouse.

The field office director found that the applicant failed to establish that her qualifying relative would experience extreme hardship as a consequence of her inadmissibility. The application was denied accordingly. See Decision of the Field Office Director dated April 23, 2013.

On appeal the applicant's spouse contends in the Notice of Appeal (Form I-290B) that he is suffering without the applicant and his children are suffering in Mexico. With the appeal the applicant's spouse submits a statement and financial documentation. The record contains statements from the applicant and spouse; letters of support; letters from school officials in Mexico about the applicant's children; medical documentation from Mexico for the applicant's children; photographs of the applicant's family and of their home and the children's school in Mexico; and country information for Mexico. The entire record was reviewed and considered in rendering this decision.

Section 212(a)(9)(B) of the Act provides, in pertinent part:

(B) Aliens Unlawfully Present.-

(i) In general. - Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

Section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act provides for a waiver of section 212(a)(9)(B)(i) inadmissibility as follows:

The Attorney General [now Secretary of Homeland Security] has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a

United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established . . . that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien.

A waiver of inadmissibility under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act is dependent on a showing that the bar to admission imposes extreme hardship on a qualifying relative, which includes the U.S. citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of the applicant. The applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative in this case. If extreme hardship to a qualifying relative is established, the applicant is statutorily eligible for a waiver, and USCIS then assesses whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. See Matter of Mendez-Morales, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996).

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O-, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator "must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation." Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. Salcido-Salcido v. INS, 138 F.3d 1292, 1293 (9th Cir. 1998) (quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The applicant's spouse states that his children suffer in Mexico and they want to come to their home in Florida. He states that since the applicant left he has lost his apartment because it is difficult to maintain a home in Florida and Mexico and that he now lives with family. He states that the children are in Mexico because he cannot afford to work and pay for child care, that one of his sons is ill, and that the children are not learning in the schools. The spouse also states that he is suffering stress but can only to go church and pray.

The applicant states that her spouse has missed work because he visits the children in Mexico. She states that her children are in danger in Mexico due to the violence, that they do not get the same level of medical care there as in the United States, and that school is taught in Spanish but English should be their first language. She also states that she needs to work to help her spouse. Letters from school officials in Mexico state that the applicant's children appear sad and participate little in class as they miss their school and friends in the United States.

The AAO finds that the record fails to establish that the qualifying spouse will suffer extreme hardship as a consequence of being separated from the applicant. The applicant's spouse states that he suffers from stress, but the record contains no supporting evidence concerning the emotional hardship the applicant's spouse states he is experiencing due to separation from the applicant or how such emotional hardships are outside the ordinary consequences of removal or inadmissibility. Going on record without supporting documentary evidence generally is not sufficient for purposes of meeting the burden of proof in these proceedings. See Matter of Soffici, 22 I&N Dec. 158, 165 (Comm. 1998) (citing Matter of Treasure Craft of California, 14 I&N Dec. 190 (Reg. Comm. 1972)).

The applicant's spouse states that he is experiencing financial hardship because he cannot support two households, has lost his apartment in the United States, and is now living with family. The record contains water bill receipts and rent receipts for the residence the spouse claims he lost, but it is not clear from the record if these documents relate to the home where the applicant resided with her spouse.¹ No documentation has been submitted establishing any financial contribution by the applicant before her departure from the United States to establish that without her physical presence in the United States her spouse will experience financial hardship. Further, it has not been established that the applicant is unable to support herself while in Mexico, thereby ameliorating the hardships referenced by the applicant's spouse with respect to having to maintain two households. Documentation on record is insufficient to establish that the applicant's spouse suffers financial hardship due to separation from the applicant.

Further, courts considering the impact of financial detriment on a finding of extreme hardship have repeatedly held that, while it must be considered in the overall determination, "[e]conomic disadvantage alone does not constitute "extreme hardship." Ramirez-Durazo v. INS, 794 F.2d 491, 497 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that "lower standard of living in Mexico and the difficulties of readjustment to that culture and environment . . . simply are not sufficient.").

The AAO notes that the record also contains receipts in Spanish without translation or explanation. The regulations at 8 C.F.R. § 103.2(b)(3) require that any document containing foreign language submitted to USCIS be accompanied by a full English language translation which the translator has certified as complete and accurate, and by the translator's certification that he or she is competent to translate from the foreign language into English.

The record contains references to hardship the applicant's children would experience if the waiver application were denied. It is noted that Congress did not include hardship to an alien's children as a factor to be considered in assessing extreme hardship under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act. In the present case, the applicant's spouse is the only qualifying relative for the waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, and hardship to the applicant's children will not be separately considered, except as it may affect the applicant's spouse. Medical documentation on record shows that the applicant's children were seen by a doctor in Mexico, but there is no indication of serious illnesses that would create hardship for the applicant's spouse. The record does not contain evidence of the effects of any hardship the children are experiencing on the applicant's spouse. Further, here the applicant's children are U.S. citizens who could remain in the United States with the applicant's spouse.

The AAO recognizes that the applicant's spouse will endure hardship as a result of separation from the applicant. However, his situation if he remains in the United States is typical to individuals separated as a result of removal and does not rise to the level of extreme hardship based on the record. The difficulties that the applicant's spouse would face as a result of his separation from the applicant, even when considered in the aggregate, do not rise to the level of extreme as contemplated by statute and case law. In regard to any hardship the applicant's spouse would experience if he were to relocate to Mexico to reside with the applicant, the AAO notes this criteria has not been addressed.

¹ The address on these documents differs from the address the applicant listed as her residence from 2002 to 2011 on her Form G-325, Biographic Information, which is where the spouse states he now lives.

In this case, the record does not contain sufficient evidence to show that the hardships faced by the qualifying relative, considered in the aggregate, rise beyond the common results of removal or inadmissibility to the level of extreme hardship. As the applicant has not established extreme hardship to a qualifying family member, no purpose would be served in determining whether the applicant merits a waiver as a matter of discretion.

In application proceedings, it is the applicant's burden to establish eligibility for the immigration benefit sought. Section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. Here, that burden has not been met.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
