

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration
Services

(b)(6)

DATE: AUG 06 2014 Office: NEBRASKA SERVICE CENTER

FILE: [REDACTED]

IN RE: [REDACTED]

APPLICATION: Application for Waiver of Grounds of Inadmissibility pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v)

ON BEHALF OF APPLICANT:

SELF-REPRESENTED

INSTRUCTIONS:

Enclosed please find the decision of the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) in your case. This is a non-precedent decision. The AAO does not announce new constructions of law nor establish agency policy through non-precedent decisions.

Thank you,

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "Ron Rosenberg".

Ron Rosenberg
Chief, Administrative Appeals Office

DISCUSSION: The waiver application was denied by the Director, Nebraska Service Center, and is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The appeal will be sustained.

The applicant is a native and citizen of Honduras who was found to be inadmissible to the United States pursuant to section 212(a)(9)(B)(i)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(i)(II), for having been unlawfully present in the United States for more than one year and seeking readmission within 10 years of his last departure from the United States. The applicant seeks a waiver of inadmissibility in order to reside in the United States with his U.S. citizen spouse and child.

In a decision, dated January 14, 2014, the director found that the applicant had failed to show that his U.S. citizen spouse would suffer hardship rising to the level of extreme hardship as a result of the applicant's inadmissibility. The application was denied accordingly.

On appeal, the applicant states that he submitted evidence with his initial waiver application which was not considered. He states that he now has a U.S. citizen son, born on July 25, 2013, that the family is suffering emotionally and financially as a result of separation, and as a result of the conditions in Honduras.

Section 212(a)(9) of the Act provides:

(B) ALIENS UNLAWFULLY PRESENT.-

(i) In general.- Any alien (other than an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence) who-

(I) was unlawfully present in the United States for a period of more than 180 days but less than 1 year, voluntarily departed the United States (whether or not pursuant to section 244(e) prior to the commencement of proceedings under section 235(b)(1) or section 240), and again seeks admission within 3 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal, or

(II) has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or more, and who again seeks admission within 10 years of the date of such alien's departure or removal from the United States, is inadmissible.

(ii) Construction of unlawful presence.- For purposes of this paragraph, an alien is deemed to be unlawfully present in the United States if the alien is present in the United States after the expiration of the period of stay authorized by the Attorney General or is present in the United States without being admitted or paroled.

(v) Waiver.-The Attorney General has sole discretion to waive clause (i) in the case of an immigrant who is the spouse or son or daughter of a United States citizen or of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if it is established to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the refusal of admission to such immigrant alien would result in extreme hardship to the citizen or lawfully resident spouse or parent of such alien. No court shall have jurisdiction to review a decision or action by the Attorney General regarding a waiver under this clause.

The record reflects that the applicant entered the United States without inspection on March 16, 2007 and did not depart until January 18, 2013. The applicant is therefore inadmissible under section 212(a)(9)(B)(i) of the Act for having been unlawfully present in the United States. The applicant's qualifying relative is his U.S. citizen spouse.

Extreme hardship is "not a definable term of fixed and inflexible content or meaning," but "necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances peculiar to each case." Matter of Hwang, 10 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 1964). In Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, the Board provided a list of factors it deemed relevant in determining whether an alien has established extreme hardship to a qualifying relative. 22 I&N Dec. 560, 565 (BIA 1999). The factors include the presence of a lawful permanent resident or United States citizen spouse or parent in this country; the qualifying relative's family ties outside the United States; the conditions in the country or countries to which the qualifying relative would relocate and the extent of the qualifying relative's ties in such countries; the financial impact of departure from this country; and significant conditions of health, particularly when tied to an unavailability of suitable medical care in the country to which the qualifying relative would relocate. Id. The Board added that not all of the foregoing factors need be analyzed in any given case and emphasized that the list of factors was not exclusive. Id. at 566.

The Board has also held that the common or typical results of removal and inadmissibility do not constitute extreme hardship, and has listed certain individual hardship factors considered common rather than extreme. These factors include: economic disadvantage, loss of current employment, inability to maintain one's present standard of living, inability to pursue a chosen profession, separation from family members, severing community ties, cultural readjustment after living in the United States for many years, cultural adjustment of qualifying relatives who have never lived outside the United States, inferior economic and educational opportunities in the foreign country, or inferior medical facilities in the foreign country. See generally Matter of Cervantes-Gonzalez, 22 I&N Dec. at 568; Matter of Pilch, 21 I&N Dec. 627, 632-33 (BIA 1996); Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. 880, 883 (BIA 1994); Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. 245, 246-47 (Comm'r 1984); Matter of Kim, 15 I&N Dec. 88, 89-90 (BIA 1974); Matter of Shaughnessy, 12 I&N Dec. 810, 813 (BIA 1968).

However, though hardships may not be extreme when considered abstractly or individually, the Board has made it clear that "[r]elevant factors, though not extreme in themselves, must be considered in the aggregate in determining whether extreme hardship exists." Matter of O-J-O, 21 I&N Dec. 381, 383 (BIA 1996) (quoting Matter of Ige, 20 I&N Dec. at 882). The adjudicator “must consider the entire range of factors concerning hardship in their totality and determine whether the combination of hardships takes the case beyond those hardships ordinarily associated with deportation.” Id.

The actual hardship associated with an abstract hardship factor such as family separation, economic disadvantage, cultural readjustment, et cetera, differs in nature and severity depending on the unique circumstances of each case, as does the cumulative hardship a qualifying relative experiences as a result of aggregated individual hardships. See, e.g., Matter of Bing Chih Kao and Mei Tsui Lin, 23 I&N Dec. 45, 51 (BIA 2001) (distinguishing Matter of Pilch regarding hardship faced by qualifying relatives on the basis of variations in the length of residence in the United States and the ability to speak the language of the country to which they would relocate). For example, though family separation has been found to be a common result of inadmissibility or removal, separation from family living in the United States can also be the most important single hardship factor in considering hardship in the aggregate. See Salcido-Salcido v. I.N.S., 138 F.3d 1292 (9th Cir. 1998)(quoting Contreras-Buenfil v. INS, 712 F.2d 401, 403 (9th Cir. 1983)); but see Matter of Ngai, 19 I&N Dec. at 247 (separation of spouse and children from applicant not extreme hardship due to conflicting evidence in the record and because applicant and spouse had been voluntarily separated from one another for 28 years). Therefore, we consider the totality of the circumstances in determining whether denial of admission would result in extreme hardship to a qualifying relative.

The record contains references to hardship the applicant’s child would experience if the waiver application were denied. It is noted that Congress did not include hardship to an applicant’s children as a factor to be considered in assessing extreme hardship. In the present case, the applicant’s spouse is the only qualifying relative for the waiver under section 212(a)(9)(B)(v) of the Act, and hardship to the applicant’s child will not be separately considered, except as it may affect the applicant’s spouse.

The record of hardship includes: the birth certificate of the applicant’s son, a letter from a licensed social worker concerning the applicant’s spouse, a letter from the director of an educational center in Honduras, two letters from the applicant’s spouse, a letter from the applicant, a letter from a community organization in Honduras, two letters from cousins of the applicant, and a birth certificate showing that the applicant’s first child with his spouse died at childbirth.

The record establishes that the applicant’s U.S. citizen spouse is suffering extreme hardship as a result of separation and will suffer extreme hardship as a result of relocation. The record shows that the couple suffered the death of their first child in 2012 after their daughter was born prematurely. In 2013 the applicant’s spouse gave birth to a son, who is now one year old. The record indicates that this child was also born prematurely, causing the applicant’s spouse to have to leave work earlier than expected. The record states that the applicant’s spouse is having emotional and financial difficulty caring for her son without the help of the applicant. She states that she and the applicant suffered very much when they lost their first child and that she needs the applicant for financial and emotional support. A letter from a licensed social worker, letters from family, and hospital documentation support these statements. Thus, because of the applicant’s family's history of loss and the applicant's spouse's current problems caring for their son, the record establishes extreme hardship upon separation.

The record also indicates that the applicant's spouse would suffer extreme hardship upon relocation. The record establishes that the applicant has not been able to find employment in Honduras. In addition, the State Department has issued a travel warning for Honduras and the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has granted temporary protected status (TPS) to nationals of Honduras residing in the United States through January 5, 2015. The travel warning, dated June 24, 2014, states that the level of crime and violence in Honduras is critically high and the Government of Honduras lacks the resources to address these issues. The warning states that since 2010, Honduras has had the highest murder rate in the world. Moreover, the report states that members of the [REDACTED] have been known to engage in criminal activity, including murder and car theft, and that the government of Honduras lacks sufficient resources to properly investigate and prosecute cases, with police often lacking vehicles or fuel to respond to calls for assistance. The report indicates that in practice, this means police may take hours to arrive at the scene of a violent crime, or may not respond at all which then results in criminals operating with a high degree of impunity throughout Honduras. The report states that the location and timing of criminal activity is unpredictable in Honduras.

The DHS TPS designation was granted to Honduran nationals due to the conditions in the country following a 1998 hurricane. Extensions of TPS were granted after DHS made the determination that conditions in Honduras were still too poor to absorb the return of their nationals. Countries are designated for TPS in situations where: there is an ongoing armed conflict within the state and due to that conflict, return of nationals to that state would pose a serious threat to their personal safety; the state has suffered an environmental disaster resulting in a substantial, temporary disruption of living conditions, the state is temporarily unable to handle adequately the return of its nationals, and the state has requested TPS designation; or there exist other extraordinary and temporary conditions in the state that prevent nationals from returning in safety. Thus, given the country conditions in Honduras and the applicant's inability to find employment, the record indicates that the applicant's spouse would suffer extreme hardship upon relocation.

Considered in the aggregate, the applicant has established that his spouse would face extreme hardship if the applicant's waiver request is denied.

Extreme hardship is a requirement for eligibility, but once established it is but one favorable discretionary factor to be considered. Matter of Mendez-Moralez, 21 I&N Dec. 296, 301 (BIA 1996). For waivers of inadmissibility, the burden is on the applicant to establish that a grant of a waiver of inadmissibility is warranted in the exercise of discretion. Id. at 299. The adverse factors evidencing an alien's undesirability as a permanent resident must be balanced with the social and humane considerations presented on his behalf to determine whether the grant of relief in the exercise of discretion appears to be in the best interests of this country. Id. at 300.

The AAO notes that Matter of Marin, 16 I & N Dec. 581 (BIA 1978), involving a section 212(c) waiver, is used in waiver cases as guidance for balancing favorable and unfavorable factors and this cross application of standards is supported by the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA). In Matter of Mendez-Moralez, the BIA, assessing the exercise of discretion under section 212(h) of the Act, stated:

We find this use of Matter of Marin, supra, as a general guide to be appropriate. For the most part, it is prudent to avoid cross application, as between different types of relief, of particular principles or standards for the exercise of discretion. Id. However, our reference to Matter of Marin, supra, is only for the purpose of the approach taken in that case regarding the balancing of favorable and unfavorable factors within the context of the relief being sought under section 212(h)(1)(B) of the Act. See, e.g., Palmer v. INS, 4 F.3d 482 (7th Cir.1993) (balancing of discretionary factors under section 212(h)). We find this guidance to be helpful and applicable, given that both forms of relief address the question of whether aliens with criminal records should be admitted to the United States and allowed to reside in this country permanently.

Matter of Mendez-Moralez at 300.

In Matter of Mendez-Moralez, in evaluating whether section 212(h)(1)(B) relief is warranted in the exercise of discretion, the BIA stated that:

The factors adverse to the applicant include the nature and underlying circumstances of the exclusion ground at issue, the presence of additional significant violations of this country's immigration laws, the existence of a criminal record and, if so, its nature, recency and seriousness, and the presence of other evidence indicative of an alien's bad character or undesirability as a permanent resident of this country. . . . The favorable considerations include family ties in the United States, residence of long duration in this country (particularly where the alien began his residency at a young age), evidence of hardship to the alien and his family if he is excluded and deported, service in this country's Armed Forces, a history of stable employment, the existence of property or business ties, evidence of value and service to the community, evidence of genuine rehabilitation if a criminal record exists, and other evidence attesting to the alien's good character (e.g., affidavits from family, friends, and responsible community representatives). .

Id. at 301.

The BIA further states that upon review of the record as a whole, a balancing of the equities and adverse matters must be made to determine whether discretion should be favorably exercised. The equities that the applicant for section 212(h)(1)(B) relief must bring forward to establish that he merits a favorable exercise of administrative discretion will depend in each case on the nature and circumstances of the ground of exclusion sought to be waived and on the presence of any additional adverse matters, and as the negative factors grow more serious, it becomes incumbent upon the applicant to introduce additional offsetting favorable evidence. Id. at 301.

The favorable factors in the applicant's case include: hardship the applicant's wife and child will face if he is found inadmissible, the lack of any criminal record, and his attributes as a supportive husband and father. The unfavorable factors in the applicant's case include his illegal entry and unlawful residence in the United States.

Although the applicant's immigration violations are serious, the record establishes that the positive factors in this case outweigh the negative factors and a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. The burden of establishing eligibility for the waiver rests entirely with the applicant. See section 291 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1361. In this case, the applicant has met his burden and the appeal will be sustained.

ORDER: The appeal is sustained.